Candidate ramps up battling child bills

By Charlie Stiles

Chicago's Children's Medical Center on West Campus has been a focus of state approval as it aims to provide adequate treatment for the city's children.

The center, which has been operating for about 20 years, has been the subject of much praise by state lawmakers.

"This is a great opportunity for the state to come together and be a leader on this issue," said state Rep. Michael J. Bailey, D-Chicago. "We have a chance to make a real difference in the lives of these children.

The center has been working on a number of initiatives to improve child health care, including a new program that provides transportation to and from the hospital.

"Children should not have to travel long distances for health care," Bailey said. "This is something we can do to help them get the care they need.

The center has also been working to improve the quality of care it provides, including increasing the number of specialists available to treat children.

"We are committed to providing the best possible care for our patients," said center director Dr. John H. Smith.

"We are making progress in improving the quality of care we provide, and we are excited about the opportunities we have to continue to do so.

The center has also been working to increase funding for programs that help kids with special needs.

"We are scheduled to receive a large grant this year to help fund programs that support kids with special needs," Smith said.

"This is an important step forward, and we are grateful for the support of the state in helping us to continue to improve the care we provide.

The center has also been working to improve the accessibility of its services, including developing new programs that provide care to kids who live far from the hospital.

"We are committed to making sure that all kids have access to the care they need," Smith said.

"We are working hard to make sure that all kids in the state have access to the care they need, and we are excited about the opportunities we have to continue to do so.
