Niles native's P.E.T. project diagnoses patients' heart conditions

by Sheryl Mackos

Dr. Elmore teens the patient with a small amount of radioactive material. The material, named tetrodecavanadium or 111m-V, is a natural substance and is brought into the patient's body through a needle. The patient is then spread out on a table, and the PET scan machine comes through the body. Scans are taken from the head to the feet. The data is analyzed by a computer which shows the blood flow to various areas of the body. The tests can help doctors diagnose heart attacks.

Simone is excited about P.E.T. and calls it the "wave of the future." His first project, Ed Jones' study of the heart, has been a success. The test has been completed, and the results are being analyzed. The patient is doing well, and the test has shown promising results.
