TASTE OF PARK RIDGE

www.tasteofparkridge.com

ON BEHALF OF THE ENTIRE TASTE COMMITTEE AND VOLUNTEER STAFF,
THANK YOU TO THE ENTIRE COMMUNITY FOR YOUR SUPPORT AND ATTENDANCE.

Dean T. Patras, the Man Behind the Magic of the Taste of Park Ridge

The Taste of Park Ridge Committee would like thank everyone who joined us last week at our festive celebration! We deeply appreciate the efforts of City staff, including Fire, Library, Police, and Public Works personnel. And we certainly won't forget the Park District. We are also indebted to WGN television, who gave us a "Friday to Remember" with last week's Taste of Park Ridge Block Party. A huge thank you is in order also, to our wonderful sponsors, entertainers, volunteers, and vendors, without whom we could never stage a Taste. But I felt it appropriate to share last year's message to everyone, after the heartfelt loss of my dear friend and co-founder of the Taste of Park Ridge, Dean T. Patras.

Dean T. Patras was not only the unsung hero of the Taste of Park Ridge. He was undeniably one of the most dedicated volunteers in Park Ridge history. Many people were not aware of that, because Dean never boasted about anything. He simply wanted to help. That is what a genuine volunteer does. To paraphrase Dean's son Dean J., Dean was not the person to whom one would hand the microphone, but he was the one who had probably secured the microphone in the first place. The spotlight was not Dean's forte. Working tirelessly behind the scenes was.

An accomplished businessman, having owned Broadway Livery in Chicago, and Ann's Pizza and Giappo's Restaurant in Park Ridge, Dean was intelligent, industrious, well organized, and incredibly loyal. As was true of the Taste's legendary John Wamimont, many of the initiatives with which Dean became involved, were the results of having been asked by his friends for help. Dean was the first person invited to join the original Taste committee in 2005 (he had already helped to launch the Taste of Uptown in 1998, then the Taste of Park Ridge in 2000). His "help" was also requested when the Holiday Lights committee was formed in 2009. Prior to that, Dean was instrumental in creating an enormously successful soccer league in Park Ridge.

The Taste of Park Ridge is a celebration of all that is positive in our wonderful community. Dean always stayed true to the committee's initial vision: that of presenting a professional, first class family oriented festival where attendees could enjoy a wide variety of food offerings, top notch free entertainment, and most importantly, the camaraderie of each other.

We have been privileged to work alongside a significant number of impressive individuals throughout the Taste's history, including committee members, City, Chamber, and Park District personnel, suppliers, food vendors, and volunteers. But of one thing I am certain. There would have never been a Taste of Park Ridge were it not for the incomparable Dean T. Patras.

'We feel like his voice is heard'

Murder charge filed in 2014 death of SIU student, 19

By GENEVIEVE BOOKWALTER
Pioneer Press

Pravin Varughese's family visits his grave in Niles every day, but Friday's pilgrimage was different.

"Yesterday, I was hoping to tell him good news," his mother, Lovely Varughese, said Friday. "Today, I have good news."

More than three years after the 19-year-old Morton Grove man disappeared while attending Southern Illinois University — only to be found dead in a wooded area near campus a few days later — authorities announced an indictment of first-degree murder in connection with Varughese's death.

Authorities identified the man charged as Gaeg Bethune, 22, of Eldorado, a town about 50 miles east of Carbondale in southern Illinois.

The indictment itself is sealed, and online records don't detail the allegations, but Bethune turned himself in Thursday and bail was set at $1 million. He was released on bond around noon Friday, according to officials with the Jackson County Jail.

Sgt. Amber Ronketto of the Carbondale Police Department said the investigation "is ongoing" and her colleagues are collaborating with the Illinois state's attorney's appellate prosecutor's office, which filed the indictment.

SIU officials on Friday declined to comment on the indictment but expressed support for Varughese's family.

"We cannot speak to the external investigation or its outcome, but Pravin and the Varughese family remain in our thoughts," said university spokeswoman

ERIN HOOLEY/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Lovely and Mathew Varughese sit Friday at the Niles grave of their son, Pravin, who was found dead in 2014.

Rae Goldsmith.

Bethune's father, Don Bethune, on Friday said the family plans to fight the charges. They have retained former Jackson County State's Attorney Michael Wepsiec in Murphysboro to represent Bethune.

Don Bethune said he posted bond Friday morning for his son, whom he described as a working man and father of a 1-year-old daughter with his girlfriend of 10 years.

"That's what you do in life," especially for family, Don Bethune said about paying bond. "Go to work and take care of what you can."

Wepsiec said that "once we try this case in the court of law, not the court of public opinion or the court of Facebook," the public might see a different side of his client than what has recently been portrayed.

The Jackson County sheriff's office deferred comment to the state's attorney's office. And David Robinson, deputy director of the 4th District at the Illinois state's attorney's appellate prosecutor's office in Springfield, referred questions to a news release issued by his office Friday morning.

The grand jury indictment, however, was the culmination of a yearslong crusade by Varughese's family and other supporters who were unwilling to accept an initial finding that Varughese died of hypothermia on a cold winter night after having attended a party near campus.

Carbondale police said Varughese's body was found on the eastern side of town in a woody area on Feb. 18, 2014, five days after he was reported missing.

Police had said Varughese ran into the wooded area after getting into a dispute with a "recent acquaintance." Authorities did not publicly explain what the dispute might have entailed, other than to say that Varughese got out of the vehicle on his own and that his body showed no clear signs of trauma.

Carbondale police Chief Jody O'Guinn — who was later fired under circumstances officials described as being unrelated to the Varughese case — told reporters at a news conference the day Varughese was found that he likely had trouble getting out of the woods because of the "difficult terrain and low temperatures."

But a police report by an Illinois State Police officer on the night Varughese died detailed mysterious circumstances around the former track and cross-country runner's disappearance.

In the report, the trooper describes pulling over to help a driver on Illinois Highway 13 about 12:30 a.m. Feb. 13 near where Varughese's body would eventually be found.

The driver, who had a red spot on his cheek, according to the trooper's report, told a story of seeing a man on the side of the road and offering him a ride. The driver said the man attacked him and ran off into the woods, according to the report.

The report said the driver left after declining help from the trooper, who scanned the woods and then left the scene.

Varughese's family, meanwhile, had been saying there were even more signs that something went

SIU student beaten, robbed before his death, indictment charges

Staff report

More than three years after the mysterious death of a Morton Grove man away at Southern Illinois University, details have emerged in what prosecutors say happened that cold February night in downstate Illinois.

An indictment issued last week in Jackson County said that 19-year-old Pravin Varughese died of hypothermia after being beaten and robbed.

Gaega Bethune, 22, has been charged with two counts of first-degree murder in Varughese's death. Bethune is a resident of Eldorado, about 50 miles east of Carbondale in southern Illinois.

SIU-Carbondale officials said Bethune is not, and has never been, a student there.

Varughese's eventual death from hypothermia, the indictment charges, was a "natural and foreseeable consequence" of the beating and robbery.

Indicting documents said that Bethune admitted to authorities that he inflicted "multiple punches to the head and face, rendering (Varughese) 'dead weight.' "

After Varughese's death, his family and friends fought for more investigation, refusing to accept the explanation that he simply wandered off into the woods and died. Varughese's family commissioned a private autopsy that found signs of blunt force trauma, and they said social media posts and phone calls he made that night indicated he might have been attacked or in a fight.

A special prosecutor was eventually assigned to the case, and Lovely Varughese, Pravin Varughese's mother, credited that move with the recent developments.

According to the indictment, Varughese's injuries included "forehead contusions/impressions and injuries to the nose consistent with blunt force trauma."

"It was a day we had waited for for so long," Varughese's mother said last week of charges being filed in her son's death. "We feel like his voice is heard and he's happy today."

Bethune, who was released on bond July 14, could not be reached for comment. But his father, Don, told Pioneer Press last week that his son will fight the charges and that they have retained a lawyer for his defense. He described his son as a hardworking father.

Varughese was a former track and cross-country runner attending school at SIU that February in 2014, when he attended a party near campus.

Later that night, a state trooper reported seeing a man with a red mark on his cheek stopped by the side of the road near where Varughese's body would be found. The man told the trooper a story of offering someone a ride, only to be attacked when he asked for gas money, the report said.

The trooper scanned the area, he said, and then left. Varughese was found dead in a nearby wooded area five days later.

If convicted of both counts, Bethune faces a potential sentence of 20-60 years in prison, according to the indictment.

Bethune was scheduled to appear in court July 18, said Deputy Craig Harju, with the Jackson County Sheriff's Office.

Eventually a special prosecutor was brought in, whom Lovely Varughese credits with the case's latest developments.

"We did not stop the noise," she said of her efforts to push for further investigation into her son's death.

The crusade resonated with many people; a memorial service held on the anniversary of Varughese's death drew hundreds of people.

Lovely Varughese said there was "screaming and crying" at her home when the special prosecutor called Thursday with the news.

"I don't know how to explain it," she said. "It was a day we had waited for for so long. ... We feel like his voice is heard and he's happy today."

Now, she said, she's content to let the legal process move forward.

"To me, our part is done. Whatever happens now, we leave it up to the law," she said. "(The suspect) needs to take responsibility."

Bethune is scheduled to appear in court Tuesday, said Deputy Craig Harju with the Jackson County sheriff's office.

Niles dealership hosts BBQ for troops

Coordinated fundraiser benefits local military

Staff report

Plumes of smoke billowed from barbecue grills at a number of car dealerships across suburban Chicago July 15 as they participated in a coordinated fundraiser event benefiting local military personnel.

Golf Mill Ford in Niles was among the dealerships that participated in the "Barbecue for the Troops," program sponsored by the Chicago Automobile Trade Association and the USO of Illinois. Though the July 15 event was the fifth consecutive one, according to organizers, it was the first time Golf Mill Ford participated.

"It's such a great cause. We want to make sure we're involved in the community and charitable as well," said Adrienne Salazar, the dealership's spokeswoman for the event. "We prepped food for 600 people and we went through all of the food."

For part of the day, dealership personnel - including volunteers - manned grills and served up hot dogs and burgers. Some people took time to sit underneath a pitched tent where tables were set up to eat onsite.

"One hundred percent of the proceeds raised will support troops deployed and at home, military families, wounded, ill and injured troops as well as families of the fallen," according to the USO Illinois website.

The nonprofit organization provides recreational, educational and cultural programs and services to military personnel and their families. Over 300,000 active duty, guard and reserve troops statewide are aided by the USO, the website states.

CATA officials report that over 100 dealerships participated in this year's event. Further, since Barbecue for the Troops started in 2013, over half of a million dollars has been raised, according to CATA.

Organizers from CATA, which also hosts the annual Chicago Auto Show, said the fundraiser started as a "grassroots effort" but has grown to a more widespread doing that continues to grow.

"We've been blown away with the success of the program, and each year outpaces the previous with more funds raised, increased dealership participation and heightened awareness for the USO of Illinois and local military," CATA Chairman John Hennessy said in a news release before the event. "The amount of energy and resources that local dealerships pour into their barbecue fundraisers is unparalleled. Despite the fact that these dealerships represent different brands, they all come together in support of this great cause."

Golf Mill Ford also welcomed a local radio station that broadcasted live from the dealership grounds.

"The USO Barbecue for the Troops initiative has raised more than $420,000 to support local troops and their families. Chicagoland dealerships have helped make a difference in the lives of our service members and their families," USO of Illinois President and CEO Alison Ruble said in the release.

The All Saints Shrine at St. Martha Catholic Church in Morton Grove contains relics of more than 1,500 different saints. One such relic is the right femur of Anthony of Lerins. The church was burglarized on May 25, and though no relics were taken, two medals are missing, and church staff are hoping the items can be recovered.

Local church wants stolen religious medals returned

For some, 'they mean nothing,' for others 'a fortune'

By BRIAN L. COX
Pioneer Press

Morton Grove police are seeking the public's help in solving a theft in which a man and a woman were caught on security camera stealing two 300-year-old religious medals from the All Saints Shrine at St. Martha Catholic Church.

Although the theft occurred May 25, church officials only recently noticed that the medals were missing, said the Rev. Dennis O'Neill.

He said he let a man and a woman into the church, located at 8523 Georgiana Ave. in Morton Grove, on May 25 so they could look at some of the more than 1,700 religious relics on display.

But O'Neill said that it wasn't until about two weeks ago that he noticed the medals were missing. He immediately notified police and started checking the church's backlog of security camera footage, he said.

He said that is when he quickly discovered footage of the May 25 theft and the thieves in action.

"Please give the medals back," the faith leader implored.

The medals date back to 1682 and were given by the Archbishop of Mexico City to people who made donations for the building of the original basilica of Our Lady of Guadalupe, O'Neill said.

He added that the shrine includes the bones of some saints and other "priceless" relics.

"They didn't steal any of the relics," he said. "I'm not sure why."

The male suspect is also seen on video accidentally knocking down a plaque which broke, O'Neill said.

"Maybe that scared him off," he said. "He took something like a coat hanger out of his bag and he was poking around in the poor box. As far as I know, all they got were those two medals."

Authorities said anyone with information on the theft is asked to call Morton Grove police at (847) 470-5200.

"All the items in the church are regarded as 'priceless,'" O'Neill said.

He said that although the medals only cost the church a few hundred dollars each to purchase, their value is not measured in money alone.

"For some people, they mean nothing. For others, they mean a fortune," he said. "We can't insure anything here. It's a real problem."

He also said he hopes the medals are returned to the church.

POLICE REPORT

The following items were taken from the Niles Police Department reports. An arrest does not constitute a finding of guilt. Only a court of law can make that determination.

TRESPASS

■ Matthew Cameron, 33, of the 7100 block of Main Street, Niles, was charged with criminal trespass on July 3 after police said he entered a house in the 7500 block of Keeney Street without permission. Cameron is scheduled to appear in court July 24.

THEFT

■ Frank Davis, 25, of the 2700 block of Harrison Street, Chicago, was charged with retail theft on July 2 after police said he stole two bottles of alcohol, valued at $57, from a store in the 7300 block of Melvina Avenue. Davis is scheduled to appear in court Aug. 3.

BATTERY

■ Isai Cardenas-Xolio, 31, and Onesimo Cardenas-Xolio, 30, both of the 8600 block of Milwaukee Avenue, Niles, were each charged with domestic battery on July 7 after police said they were involved in a physical altercation with each other. Police said both sustained injuries. Isai Cardenas-Xolio and Onesimo Cardenas-Xolio are each scheduled to appear in court Aug. 2.

■ A 17-year-old Niles boy was charged with domestic battery on July 1 after police said he punched a family member in the face.

DUI

■ Kate Borri, 26, of the 600 block of West Schubert, Chicago, was charged with driving under the influence on July 3 after she was stopped in the 7200 block of Milwaukee Avenue for driving with a flat tire, police said. Borri is scheduled to appear in court July 27.

■ Gabriel Velixaru, 42, of the 5100 block of Brummel, Skokie, was charged with driving under the influence and violation of concealed carry laws on July 5, police said. According to police, Velixaru was involved in a minor crash in the 6900 block of Touhy Avenue and was found to be carrying a firearm without a concealed carry permit. Velixaru is scheduled to appear in court Aug. 29.

■ Daniel DeRousse, 55, of the 2500 block of Westmoreland, Granite City, was charged with driving under the influence, possession of marijuana, possession of drug paraphernalia and speeding on July 6 following a traffic stop in the 7400 block of Dempster Street, police said. According to police, a small amount of marijuana and a pipe were found in DeRousse's possession.

PUBLIC INTOXICATION

■ Police said a 46-year-old Skokie man was ticketed with public intoxication on July 2 after he was found in a parking lot in the 8600 block of Dempster Street. He was taken to Advocate Lutheran General Hospital in Park Ridge.

THEFT

■ An unknown person stole nine packages of rib meat, valued at $109, from a store in the 5700 block of Touhy Avenue on July 1, police said.

PROPERTY DAMAGE

■ Police said a man threw a firecracker into a trash receptacle behind a building in the 7000 block of Crain Street, causing a fire on the afternoon of July 3. The Niles Fire Department extinguished the fire, and the unnamed man was issued a local ordinance ticket for criminal damage to property, police said.

BURGLARY TO VEHICLE

■ Ten unlocked cars were reported burglarized July 3 while parked in the 7200 block of Dobson Street, the 7700 block of Oconto Avenue, the 8500 block of Oleander Avenue and the 8400 block of Oak Avenue, police said. Items reported stolen include a purse, wallet, video game system, tools and documents.

■ A purse was reported stolen from a car parked in the 8900 block of Milwaukee Avenue July 7. Police said the car had been forcibly entered.

THEFT

■ A wallet was reported stolen July 6 from a facility in the 8200 block of West Golf Road.

Silverstein defends vote on state budget

Democrat says he didn't have any other choice

By MIKE ISAACS
Pioneer Press

When state Sen. Ira Silverstein voted to increase the state income tax, a nod that helped pave the way for the first Illinois budget in two years, he said he believed he had no other choice.

"We had to come up with a plan before the state would go into meltdown," Silverstein told about three dozen of his constituents at a July 12 town hall meeting in Skokie.

The Democrat's 8th District covers parts of Chicago as well as Skokie, Morton Grove, Lincolnwood, Niles and Glenview.

Silverstein said there had to be a way to close the gap between expenses and revenues if a balanced budget was to move forward — although not everyone in the audience agreed that the approved budget is balanced.

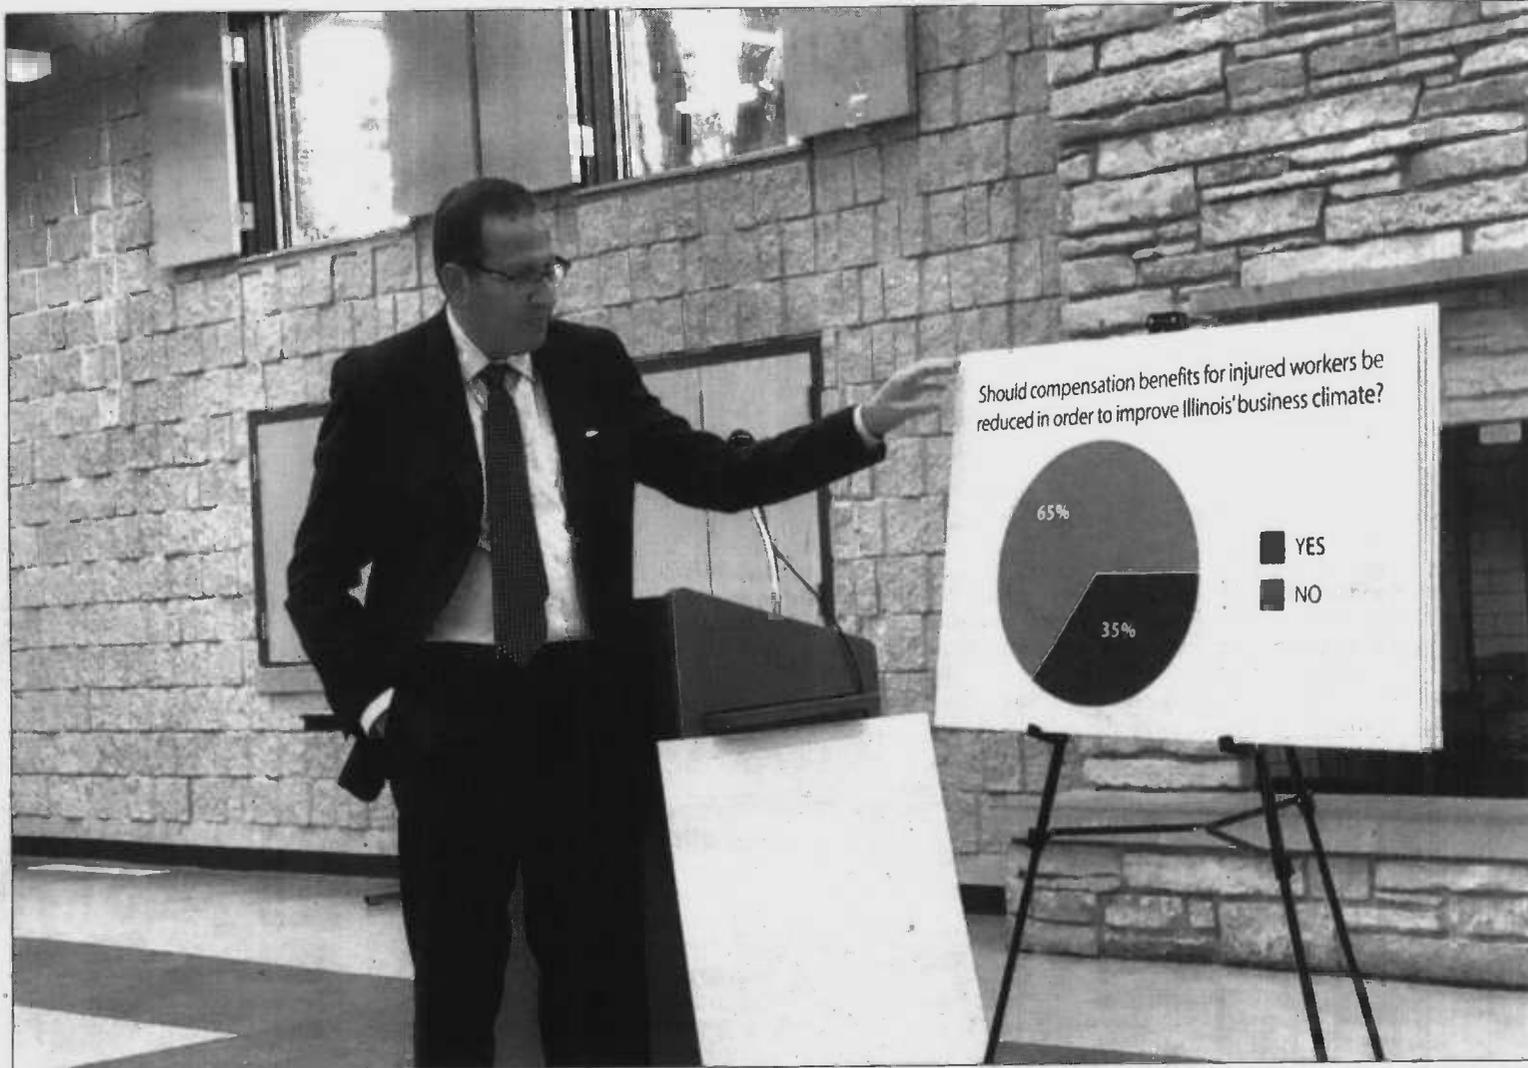

Some said that because state borrowing is factored into the budget, the budget should not be considered balanced.

"This was extremely difficult for me," he said about voting for a state income tax increase. It was the second time he faced such a vote, he said, and the first time was years ago when he voted against the increase.

His previous vote on a state income tax increase was part of a plan that did not include budget cuts the way this one did, according to Silverstein.

He said the budget plan that became law after legislators overrode Gov. Bruce Rauner's veto includes new revenue of $36.4 billion, but also more than $2.9 billion in cuts.

"I couldn't let the state go down the drain," he said. "We had to have a budget. We had been struggling for two years. Something had to be done and the legislature had to take control."

Silverstein has been holding summer town hall meetings for nearly 20 years following legislative sessions, he said.

He recaps activity that took place in Springfield and hears from constituents in gatherings he holds in Skokie, Morton Grove and two in Chicago.

He called this legislative session "the worst (he's) ever seen," in large part because of contentiousness over developing a new budget and huge egos that "got bigger by the day" in getting something done, he said.

The income tax increase approved by the legislature and backed by Silverstein included a permanent hike expected to raise $5 billion in new revenue. According to state budget information, individuals' rates will increase to 4.95 percent from 3.75 percent and corporate tax rates to 7 percent from 5.25 percent.

Silverstein said the state was staring at unprecedented financial disaster had a budget not been passed, including a drop in the state's credit rating, necessary programs having to be closed and significant financial hardship for schools and social service agencies, which already have absorbed hits because of the Springfield crisis.

The format of Silverstein's town hall meetings allow for audience members to engage in informal conversation with the state senator and to ask questions. Although many applauded Silverstein for holding such an open forum, they also voiced criticism about the state going without a budget for so long.

There was also discussion at the forum about pension reform, which Silverstein said continues to be a serious challenge the state needs to address because of years of under-funding.

Some audience members told Silverstein that people are fleeing the state now because of the severe problems in Springfield, but Silverstein took an optimistic outlook on the future and said businesses were still coming to Illinois.

"We're trying to turn things around," he said.

Chicago Botanic Garden reopens after flooding

Lake County storms led to 2-day closure

BY DANIEL I. DORFMAN
Pioneer Press

The Chicago Botanic Garden reopened this weekend after being closed due to the effects of storms that pummeled Lake County last week, according to garden officials.

Spokeswoman Julie McCaffrey said the botanic garden reopened partially on July 15 and was back to normal hours July 16 and 17.

According to the garden's website, camps and classes were canceled on July 13 and 14, and The Cactus and Succulent Society of Greater Chicago Show and Sale also was canceled for the weekend.

Garden Vice President Harriet Resnick said the decision was made late night on July 12 to shut down the 385-acre complex due to flooding in the internal roads.

"Many of the roadways have water that is too deep to pass through in a vehicle," Resnick said at the time. "Many of the lower-level gardens, including the Malott Japanese Garden, are underwater."

McCaffrey added that 3.66 inches of rain came down at the garden. Resnick said excess river water from the north caused the floods.

"It was all coming from what happened the night before in Lake County," Resnick said last week.

Officials said the botanic garden drew more than 1,000,000 people in 2016. Resnick believed this was the first time since 2013 that the garden had been closed due to flooding.

As for the village itself, Glencoe's Public Works Director David Mau reported last week that the village had three localized power outages on July 12, with one leading to disruptions for 100 properties in the western part of the village. Mau said power was restored at 10 p.m. July 12. Mau said the village received approximately three inches of rain over a six-hour period starting late night on July 11 and said that flooding occurred in several parts of the village.

Non-emergency telephone lines were disrupted at the village hall on the day following the storm, according to village spokeswoman Megan Hoffman, but the problem was resolved by the morning of July 13.

Four D64 students honored as 'ethical leaders'

Board applauds recent graduates

By LEE V. GAINES
Pioneer Press

Four Park Ridge-Niles District 64 middle school students were honored at a recent Board of Education meeting for being "exemplary ethical leaders."

Each year, the district recognizes four students as recipients of the the Judith Snow Ethical Leadership Award, District 64 Superintendent Laurie Heinz said during a June 26 board meeting. According to the district's website, the award is named after a quarter-century resident of Park Ridge and a member of the League of Women Voters.

This year's winners included four eighth-grade

graduates: Jessica Beck and Rachel Bull from Emerson Middle School, and Danielle Ammentorp and Jonathan Spychalski from Lincoln Middle School.

Students submitted applications for the award, and the winners were chosen by members of the District 64 Elementary Learning Foundation, a nonprofit organization that fundraises for the district.

"Integrity, selflessness, dependability, caring and fairness" are the five characteristics that distinguish the winners, according to the district's website.

Heinz read short descriptions of each student's ethical qualities and leadership activities to board officials and an audience that included members of Snow's family. Each student selected for the award demonstrated leadership and compassion both in school and outside of it in various extracurricular activities, according to the summaries read by Heinz.

Beck, a Girl Scout leader and middle school leader and a volleyball and softball player, "leads by doing things for others out of the goodness of her heart," Heinz said.

"Her integrity is evident in how she works hard at school and also how she strives to be kind to others," she said.

Heinz said Bull, a basketball, volleyball and soccer player, volunteers for TOP Soccer, a program that provides soccer training to children with disabilities.

A member of Lincoln's symphonic and jazz bands and a dedicated alto sax player, Ammentorp volunteers for Phil's Friends, a foundation that delivers care packages to cancer patients and their families, Heinz said.

"This demonstrates her compassion for helping others and her true leadership skills," she said.

A quartermaster for his Boy Scout troop, Spychalski teaches younger scouts how to earn badges, and assist senior patrol leaders with weekly meetings, Heinz said. She said Boy Scout values are similar to the qualities and skills possessed by an ethical leader. Spychalski "leads by being dependable," Heinz said.

Heinz offered congratulations to the winners, who attended the June 26 meeting, and told them she was proud of their accomplishments.

The four also received handshakes and congratulations from board officials.

Board President Anthony Borrelli said he hoped their record of ethical leadership would serve as an inspiration to other students.

Study to address proposed development's fiscal effect

D64 worried that Mr. K site plan could bring big cost

By LEE V. GAINES
Pioneer Press

Park Ridge-Niles School District 64 officials are looking for data on how a proposed development in Park Ridge will affect the district's bottom line and its enrollment numbers.

District 64 officials commissioned Evanston-based Teska Associates Inc. for an $8,000 study to analyze the financial impact of both a residential and a commercially oriented development on the site of the Mr. K Garden and Material Center at 1440 W. Higgins Road.

Members of the Park Ridge Planning and Zoning Commission are reviewing a concept plan for 31 town-house units on the site. The development will need City Council approval to rezone the parcel from commercial to residential.

A memo from district administrators to the board made note of an array of development activities in the city, but the document placed special emphasis on the Mr. K site because city officials were actively considering a zoning change that would, if approved, alter the amount of property tax revenue the district receives from the parcel and potentially increase the number of students enrolled in district schools.

District 64 Superintendent Laurie Heinz said in an interview last week that she's noticed in-fill development popping up across the city.

"They are largely town homes and condominiums, and we never quite know how many kids each unit will generate," she said. "Coupled with that fact that some of our facilities are almost reaching capacity, we thought it was time to commission a study for data and planning purposes."

The study will be presented both to school board and City Council members, Heinz said.

Park Ridge Mayor Marty Maloney said he's pleased the district is moving forward with a fiscal impact study.

"Anecdotally, we hear schools are overcrowded, and I don't disagree with that, but in order to have a serious discussion about future development in Park Ridge, we need some data," Maloney said in an interview this week.

Luann Kolstad, chief school business official for District 64, said in an interview last week that the district receives less revenue from residential property than commercial property. Residential property in Cook County is assessed at 10 percent of market value, while commercial is as-essed at 25 percent. Additionally, she said, if families with school-aged children move into the town-house developments, the amount of money the home would generate in tax dollars will not cover the cost to educate a new student in the district.

Heinz said the results of the study will help district officials and administrators make a decision to come out in support of or against the zoning change requested by the developer.

The study will also help administrators determine whether a district boundary study, an initiative that's planned for sometime between now and 2020, should happen sooner rather than later, she said. The boundary study will look at whether changing school boundaries will help even out the student population and ease the burden on schools that are crowded, Heinz said.

During a June 26 Board of Education meeting, district officials also mentioned the possibility of lobbying the City Council to assess an impact fee on developers. An impact fee is imposed upon a developer to help pay for the cost of providing public services.

"We need to take pressure off taxpayers, and one of the ways to ease that pressure on the taxpayer is an impact fee," board member Larry Ryles said during the June 26 meeting. "When I started asking questions a year ago, I was thoroughly surprised Park Ridge did not participate in an impact fee."

While he supports Ryle's fight for an impact fee, board member Tom Sotos said during the meeting that "it's not going to solve our problems."

"If we assess an impact fee on the 31 units considered for the Mr. K site, that impact fee won't be enough to help us potentially work around our particular problem if all 31 units end up having children in them," he said.

Kolstad agreed with that assessment during an interview last week. She said the district might recommend the board ask the city to implement such a fee, but even with one in place, the amount of revenue realized would be relatively small in comparison to the cost of educating a new student.

Maloney said he doesn't believe an impact fee would significantly ease the district's cost burden. But, he added, "that being said, I'm open to having conversations about them and we haven't had those conversations yet."

Maloney said the impact study won't stop development from occurring, but it will aid in the conversation around adding new development and increasing density in the city.

Glenview police reward good deeds with treats

BY ALEXANDRA KUKULKA

Glenview and eight other communities are participating for the first time in a campaign rewarding people who do good deeds with coupons for McDonald's ice cream.

People seen doing things such as wearing a bike helmet, obeying traffic laws and helping another person in Glenview, Buffalo Grove, Lincolnshire, Mount Prospect, Niles, Prospect Heights, Schaumburg, Wheeling and Yorkville, could receive a coupon for a free McDonald's ice cream cone from police officers, said Patricia Kemp a McDonald's spokeswoman.

"In speaking with public information officers in these communities, we thought it was a great opportunity to reward the community for doing the right thing during the summer months," she said.

Kemp said she suggested the idea in May to local police departments based on the success of similar programs across the country. Nine communities decided to participate, and the local McDonald's owners agreed to give 2,000 coupons to the participating police departments, she said.

Each police department was given 220 coupons, Kemp said. In Glenview, 160 coupons were handed out to each patrol shift, and 60 coupons were distributed to the rest of the department, said Glenview Police Department spokesman Sgt. Jim Foley.

"We're happy to partner with (McDonald's)," Foley said. "People should be recognized for the good that they do."

The coupons can only be redeemed at the participating McDonald's in the nine communities, Kemp said, adding that the program began June 21.

Chris Prucnal, the owner of two Glenview McDonald's restaurants, said that the first weekend the program started more than 100 coupons were redeemed in Glenview. Prucnal said that it is important for businesses to participate in community programs.

"What I really like about this is we can use our restaurants to help the police and the community build a relationship," Prucnal said. "I'm glad we get an opportunity to bridge that gap."

The program will continue until all of the coupons are handed out, Kemp said, adding that she hopes the program continues in the future.

"We want to keep (the program) growing and add more police departments to it," she said.

Nothing beats fresh foods in summer

RANDY BLASER

Every Sunday in the summer on the way home from a weekend on the Chain O'Lakes, we would stop at a roadside farm stand to pick up fresh fruits and vegetables.

There is nothing better than biting into a fresh juicy tomato on a summer day or a tasting a fresh ear of corn hot off the grill and slathered with butter and a dash of salt at a backyard barbecue. The explosion of taste in fresh fruits and vegetables can seem out of this world in the age of factory farms and produce shipped from thousands of miles away.

The only thing better than a farm stand tomato for flavor was a homegrown tomato, fresh out of your garden. But the simple fact was and is that nothing out of the store can taste better than fresh from the garden. I don't agree much with my dad, but he always says that "If it comes out of the garden, it's good for you."

BRIAN O'MAHONEY / PIONEER PRESS

Collin McLeod, age 4, helps his mother shop for produce July 1 during the farmers market in Arlington Heights.

The best roadside farm stand was a place called Ethel's on Route 12 around Lake Cook Road, long gone now. It had everything and everything in abundance. Corn, tomatoes, onions, radishes, lettuce, broccoli, cauliflower, the entire garden. And fresh fruit galore from strawberries to peaches to plums and apricots. Oh, I so loved apricots, but haven't had a good one in ages.

The roadside farm stands are long gone for the most part. Although on the way home from Boy Scout camp I always looked forward to bringing home two bags of potatoes, red and white, from the roadside stand.

Today we have farmers markets, and if your town doesn't have one, you should really encourage officials to get one.

Farmers markets today are like a little community fair, where neighbors come out and meet each other and enjoy the sunshine, the fresh produce and flowers, and each other.

It's the best way to shop for your summer bounty of fruits and vegetables, the best way to support local farming and the best way to interact with good, old-fashioned neighbors.

Why just close your eyes and it is like you are back in Mayberry with Andy and Barn and Opie. There might even be a little band playing bluegrass or folk. It's a touch of Americana.

As I said, tomatoes and sweet corn are the minimum buys at the farmers market. Some people go for the fresh flowers. Others go for the watermelons, and others fresh fruit.

More and more popular these days are locally grown farm-fresh honey.

There's something about fresh honey that may be more than just old wives' tales.

I have a friend who swears buy it. He tells me that all honey bought from a store has sugar added, probably in the form of corn syrup. That's why it crystallizes on your shelf, he says.

Buying locally grown honey eliminates that problem. But it has an added benefit. It boosts your immune system and helps prevent allergies because it is made from local pollen. At least so says my friend.

That sounded a bit far-fetched when he told me. But just the other day I saw it on the internet so I guess that settles it.

But that brings me to another reason to frequent farmers markets. It just has to be better for you.

If you haven't noticed, we are not a very healthy people. Just look around.

You've got healthy people running miles and miles around the neighborhood every day just to stay trim or trying to get fit. Then you have the rest of us who border on the obese, if we're not there yet.

I'm convinced it is the industrial food production system we have in this country, with its focus on high yield and quick harvests, and fake food that is more addictive than nourishing.

Cook County is looking to tax soda because it is not good for us. If it is not good for us, why do they allow the food industry to sell it to us? Does the food have to kill us immediately to be banned? What about the slow death?

So I'm a big fan of farm stands, farmers markets and locally grown food. If you can get it, take the time to find it, buy and eat it.

You'll be happier and you'll feel better.

Technological progress comes with a cost

PAUL SASSONE

I am living backwards. On June 13, 2009, I was transported back to the 1950s. That was the day all analog TV service was converted to digital.

It was the dawn of a wonderful new day in TV watching - better picture, better sound, more channels.

All done for your benefit and my benefit.

Of course there also was money to be made.

The conversion not only freed up parts of the broadcast spectrum for public safety communications, part was auctioned off to companies to provide advanced wireless services, such as wireless broadband.

To enter this TV nirvana, we either had to subscribe to some form of pay TV or buy a box that converted analog to digital. The government paid for a portion of the initial converter box cost.

The best way to go was with pay TV. But more than a few people could not afford to. They had to make do with a converter box.

I say "make do" because converter box TV watching is primitive and often doesn't work.

Remember that old

"Honeymooners" episode where Ralph and Ed buy a TV set together? They have to keep moving the rabbit ears antenna around to get a picture. Ralph, of course, falls down the stairs while trying to move the antenna to get a picture.

Today, we converter box people are living in the 1950s. Unlike Ralph Kramden, I haven't fallen down stairs trying to get a picture. But, I never can get channel 2 (CBS), occasionally I can see channel 5 (NBC) and channel 9 (WGN).

The only stations I receive almost all the time are channel 7 (ABC) and channel 11 (WTTW).

Oh yes, I do receive a bunch of foreign language channels - Spanish mostly.

Had I known this, I would have taken Spanish in school instead of German.

I bring all this up because the government has made another decision that is going to mess me up.

The Illinois legislature has passed a law allowing AT&T to eliminate landline phones.

Again, we are being forced to pay more (for cellphones and fees) so that someone - AT&T in this case - can make more money.

We can struggle along with bad TV service. But, how do we get along if we can't afford some kind of phone?

OPINION

The changing face of the college campus

PAT LENHOFF

Once the Fourth of July ends, sales fliers immediately turn toward the back-to-school season. In every store, the summer section is moved to clearance as pens, notebooks and dorm supplies take over seemingly overnight.

Talk about a cold water wake-up call. We barely finish celebrating summer's biggest holiday, and then there's back-to-school signs in your face, taunting you about the end of summer.

As is true of life in general, things change over the generations — including academia. Although elementary and high school students still have supply lists that require the basics like file folders and paper, students now are often seen with individual Chromebooks or other personal technology devices. Those tools have become an important part of the educational process.

It's probably not outrageous to speculate that someday the entire learning experience will be done electronically.

But to me, nothing has changed as much as the college experience, which seems to be moving closer toward that marker already. While many college students are still shopping for dorm accessories and spending hot weekends moving into campus living quarters, there are increasingly larger factions that not only stay home but never have to leave to perform their college studies. A computer screen is the new college campus for those students.

We've heard commercials for University of Phoenix, probably the most well-known example of an institution offering an exclusively online degree curriculum. Although they have actual locations nationwide and a main campus in the Phoenix area, they are not the traditional central quadrangle with departmental buildings and dorm.

It seems to be the beginning of a completely different approach to college life. According to an Associated Press article, there are increasingly diverse opportunities for college study that emphasize focusing on "critical thinking" rather than "regurgitating information." There are also one-year, non-degree programs focusing on data analytics and business intelligence. With countless traditional students burdened by massive financial debt from rising tuition and associated living costs, this option can be attractive.

The article continues with conjecture by some experts that there are employers who agree that traditional university settings and educational experiences might not have as much relevance for today's world. They reference companies such as Google, which dropped college education from its hiring requirements, as has the British office of Ernst & Young.

What I like about those actions is that I think there are many ways to be a smart, effective and hard worker. A college education is just one of the ways to facilitate that.

What I don't like about it is that nothing compares with a crisp autumn day on a beautiful campus, and the feeling of freedom and purpose that many students feel once mom and dad have gone home and classes have begun. It's a learning experience unlike any other, and it might teach students just as much about life as the classroom itself. I hope that never changes.

Hinsdale artist's message colorful, vibrant, patriotic

SARA CLARKSON
Dateline

I saw a number of attractive yard signs sprouting up around the Fourth of July and could tell immediately that the artist was Hinsdale's own Maureen Claffy.

She has an unmistakably exuberant style whether she is painting flowers in a vase, abstract shapes and circles or a series of valentine-shaped hearts in red, white and blue marching across a canvas.

The yard signs read "Love One Another" and "Love Lives Here." They were patriotic and optimistic. In small letters there was a website: lovelivesusa.org.

I called Maureen, but was a little late in talking to her because the yard signs were only part of the campaign. The artwork was displayed on digital billboards in Chicago for several days around the Fourth of July. Two were in Wrigleyville, one in Lincoln Park, one in the Gold Coast and one on Interstate 294.

They flashed: "One Nation," "Love One Another" and "Love Lives In America." These boards carried red, white and blue messages of patriotism, love, hope and unity.

I do not know Maureen well at all but her art work has always attracted me. I particularly like the sign "Love One Another," not just because of the written message.

The picture is of a large heart and inside the Valentine something is bursting out, fragmented but fitting nicely within the space, each little piece irregular, asymmetrical but self-contained and contributing to the beauty of the whole despite an apparent lack of order. It seems such an appropriate metaphor for our country.

In the one called "One Nation" we have a graphic of the continental United States painted in red and blue and white swirls curling around each other, creating waves and motion. As she was painting these images, Claffy said she found the red and the blue kept and swirling and staying together. She was unable to separate them, though she also did not physically mix them together to create purple either. The red and blue can't be separated.

"We are one nation," she said, no matter whether you are red or blue.

The tone and tenor of last year's presidential election inspired Claffy and these images, which are all part of her "America the Beautiful" series. She said she found the election's language uncivil, unsafe and sometimes offensive.

She was part of the Women's March that took place after the presidential inauguration this year, and afterward she said she felt "that there was all this energy and what are we going to do with it." She expressed her concern and her energy in the way that she knows how: through painting.

She came up with a few images and worked with graphic designer Christian Fleming. He is the one who took the idea of the United States' shape as the outline for one of the billboards. He took the work and used photo shop and came up with the fonts, designs for the words and written elements.

Claffy collaborated with other village women, specifically Nancy Pollak, Ramsey Ellis and Mandy Roudebush to come up with a message: Love Lives Here. Claffy was struck by the boldness of that statement and also by the rightness of it.

"The message has to be love all the way," she said.

She would like to see us all love one another and insists on love and respect in the way that we treat one another despite differences.

Claffy went even further. She thought about what her country means to her. She remembers our nation's Bicentennial in 1976, a time "I fell in love with my nation."

Even then she realized blessed we are to live in such an amazing place, and as she grew up, she learned how amazing it was that this group of men, our Founding Fathers, put together a document that is inclusive, life affirming and that seeks to make our lives better.

Claffy and her group hope to raise enough money to buy digital billboard space from one end of the United States to another for Labor Day weekend. I find the beauty, joy, obvious love and even the irregularities of her images very positive and inspiring.

For more information about Claffy and her artwork, go to maureenclaffy.squarespace.com and view the American The Beautiful Series. For more information about the Love One Another campaign, go to www.lovelivesusa.org.

Fair season brings old-fashioned fun

BY ANNIE ALLEMAN
Pioneer Press

There really isn't anything quite like the county fair.

There's usually a carnival, a pretty big musical headliner, 4-H kids showing off the culmination of their year of hard work, fried foods you normally wouldn't eat and lots of great entertainment.

Here's your guide to some of the county fairs in Northern Illinois.

Kane County Fair

When: July 20-23

Where: Kane County Fairgrounds, 525 S. Randall Road, St. Charles

Hours: 3-11 p.m. Thursday; noon-midnight Friday and Saturday; noon-10 p.m. Sunday

Cost: $5 Thursday; $10 Friday-Sunday; children 3-12 $5. Free for children under 3.

PARK RIDGE CHORALE

The Park Ridge Chorale will perform songs of peace in a July 29 concert.

MUSIC

Chorale concert invites the audience to 'imagine peace'

BY SHERYL DEVORE
Pioneer Press

The audience at the summer Park Ridge Chorale concert July 29 might get the opportunity to sing, "All we are saying is give peace a chance," along with the choir.

The iconic words written by John Lennon fit right in with the concert's theme, "Imagine Peace."

Choir director Ed Zelnis said he and choir members have discussed how over the years the chorale has had successful concerts singing pieces written about various wars.

Someone suggested the chorale should do a concert highlighting peace. "I thought that was a fabulous idea," Zelnis said, adding it's a perfect theme for "today's troubled world."

So the group, led by Zelnis since 1998, is giving peace a chance.

Zelnis said he chose pieces that had a high-energy level and could involve audience participation.

The opener is "Song of Peace," from the opera "Finlandia" written by Jean Sibelius in 1899.

"This particular arrangement has an African world music feel to it, like pounding drum beats," Zelnis said. "It should be very exciting."

The choir will sing in both English and Zulu for the piece. "We like to foray into various languages," Zelnis said.

Zelnis also wanted to perform the classic tune, "Let There Be Peace on Earth," and found one with a Gospel feel and exciting rhythm, he said.

"Delving into the era of my youth and many of the people in the chorale, I found 'Peace Train' by Cat Stevens, and we're doing a John Lennon medley, which includes 'Give Peace a Chance,' and 'Imagine.'"

And because love and peace go together, he said, the chorale will also sing "Love Train," from the Motown era.

One piece the choir is especially enjoying is "The Epitaph," based on a text possibly written by Native Americans, he said.

"It's about the eternity of spirit," he said.

One of the choir members brought the piece to Zelnis. "It's something I hadn't heard. It's really beautiful. The chorus is really taken by it," he said.

Zelnis said he's worked with the Park Ridge Chorale for nearly two decades because "they are a very vibrant group. They have wonderful energy. And they're a good fit for me because ever since the beginning of my career, I've always been involved in all sorts of music, and the choir likes to do a wide variety of music."

Indeed, Zelnis once served as Eartha Kitt's musical director, sang with Music of the Baroque for more than 20 years, has conducted productions at the Goodman and Steppenwolf Theaters and at Evanston's Light Opera Works, and has sung in the choruses of Lyric Opera and Grant Park Symphony.

The Park Ridge Chorale, with about 45 members, was formed in 1984, and performs three concerts annually.

SUBURBAN COOKS

Aurora woman opens dream sweet shop

By Judy Buchenot
The Beacon-News

While most children were watching Big Bird, Jacqueline E. Mejia spent her childhood watching "Dessert Circus," the public television series by chef Jacques Torres.

"I was fascinated by how he mixed art and chocolate together. He made such beautiful things out of chocolate," said Mejia, 28. She moved to Aurora as a teen from Chicago and went through high school still holding onto the idea of making spectacular sweets like chef Torres.

Her dream is about to come true when she opens Atravete Confections in mid-August in Naperville.

Mejia's journey to her own shop has taken several years. Although chef Torres made his creations look effortless, Mejia knew there was much more than what she saw on the television show.

She started her pastry training at the French Pastry School of Kennedy King College at City Colleges of Chicago.

"It was a six-month program that covered everything about French pastry," she said. "There were different instructors for each area like chocolate creations, sugar candy, tarts. Many of the chefs had won awards in their fields. I was really nervous about going there at first. Everyone was really great. I really learned a lot."

She said the most challenging area to master was ice cream. "There is a lot of science to ice cream if you want to make the really good stuff."

But Mejia knew there was more she needed to learn. As she contemplated her next move, she was influenced by her boyfriend, a Chicago college student about to return to his home in Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

"I found out that Chris Hanmer was accepting interns at his shop in Sioux Falls," she says referring to the chef who won the "Top Chef: Just Desserts" competition, season 2, the Bravo network show that pitted pastry chefs against each other in numerous contests. "I started there as an intern and worked my way up to being his assistant pastry chef."

After four years of learning all she could about the pastry business, Mejia wanted to return to Aurora to be closer to family. She and her boyfriend moved back to Aurora in January.

Her plan was to start by selling pastries at area farmers markets. She signed up for farmers markets in Aurora and Oswego. She called her business Atravete Confections.

"Atravete is a Spanish word meaning 'to be bold or daring.' That is what I want to do — bold and daring things." Her slogan for the company is "sweet has never been so daring."

After a few weeks at the markets, she was presented with an offer to open a shop at Saage Culinary Studio, at 2764 Aurora Ave., Suite 104, in Naperville, a professional kitchen she has been renting to make her pastries.

"I decided I need to take advantage of the opportunity," she says, living up to her claim of being bold and daring. The shop is slated to open mid-August.

One of Mejia's specialties are macarons. "There is really not an easy way to learn how to make macarons," she said. The recipe may have the measurements and instructions, but she said many skills have to be mastered by seeing it done and then doing it yourself.

"The recipe can say 'beat until light and fluffy' but you have to know what 'light and fluffy' looks and feels like. If you don't have the batter just right, it won't work. Once you have the cookie mastered, then you have to make the filling.

"So many bakers just use buttercream but the filling should be more. I usually use a mix of ganache with jams. And I don't use jams that are too sweet. The cookie is already sweet. What I try to add is flavor. I use jams that have a strong fruit flavor and less sugar. It is all about the filling."

She makes classic flavors like pistachio and caramel but also seasonal flavors like strawberries and cream and raspberry lemonade.

Mejia's favorite item to make is croissants. "Croissants take a lot of practice. The secret is to keep everything chilled. It really helps to see someone else make them. I like to make different flavors."

She was recently selling raspberry pistachio, red velvet, dark chocolate cherry and classic chocolate croissants at the markets. She plans to carry an ever-changing assortment at her shop when it opens.

True to her original muse, Jacques Torres, Mejia also works with chocolate. "You really need a temperature-controlled room to work with chocolate," she said. "And it is important to temper the chocolate just right." She makes a variety of truffles and other chocolate creations.

Although not everyone can make French pastries at first, Mejia says beginners can successfully tackle many delicious desserts.

She shares her grandmother's simple yet delicious cheesecake recipe and a great summer cupcake that mimics a banana split. For Atravete Confections, go to www.atraveteconfections.com.

Banana Split Cupcakes

Makes 12 cupcakes.

BATTER

- 1¼ cups flour
- ½ teaspoon baking powder
- ½ teaspoon baking soda
- ½ cup butter
- ½ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoons vanilla
- ¼ cup sour cream
- 2 eggs
- 2 large bananas

FILLING

- 1¼ cups cubed fresh strawberries
- 1 cup pineapple tidbits, drained
- ½ cup sugar
- 2½ tablespoons cornstarch

FROSTING

- 1½ cups whipping cream
- ⅓ cup powdered sugar
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- 3 tablespoons marshmallow fluff

1. Whisk together flour, baking powder and baking soda in a bowl and set aside. Beat butter and sugar with a mixer until light and fluffy. Add vanilla, sour cream and eggs and mix well, being sure to scrape sides of the bowl. Stir in flour mixture, just until combined. Scrape sides of bowl. Mash bananas in a small bowl. Mix bananas into batter until well combined. Place liners into a cupcake pan. Divide batter between 12 cupcake liners. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 to 20 minutes. Toothpick inserted into a cupcake should come out clean. Allow cupcakes to cool.

2. To make the filling, place strawberries, pineapple, sugar and cornstarch in a saucepan. Bring to a boil while stirring. When mixture comes to a boil, continue to boil two minutes. Remove from heat. Allow to cool. Refrigerate until ready to use. Can be made a day ahead of time and stored in refrigerator. To make frosting, place all ingredients in a bowl and whip on high speed until medium stiff peaks form.

3. To assemble cupcakes, cut a small core out of the middle of the cupcake. Fill with strawberry pineapple mixture. Pipe frosting onto the cupcake. For an extra touch, drizzle chocolate ganache or chocolate syrup over the frosting, put on some colored sprinkles and add a cherry. Refrigerate cupcakes until ready to serve.

Make the most of summer

Fresh seasonal produce a hit on the grill or in simple salads

By Veronica Hinke
Pioneer Press

"Because we can!" That's Chef Beth Partridge's answer to why we should make the most of the best produce of summer. Partridge is chef-partner at Autre Monde Cafe & Spirits in Berwyn, and she has plenty of ideas for putting summer on a plate.

"The sheer selection of produce we have available via farmers markets and specialty grocers in Chicago at the height of summer offers such variety to both professional and home chefs to expand their cooking options," she said. "You can be pretty effortlessly as healthy or decadent as you want. It's all there."

From salad dressings to chimichurri sauces to fabulous melon salads, chefs everywhere are maximizing this limited time of year with their personal favorites. And they have simple steps you can take at home.

Chef Jaime Laurita's favorite seasonal ingredient right now is "watermelon, always," he said. "I love grilling it!" Fresh watermelon is like a blank canvas to Laurita as he tries pairing it with all sorts of different herbs from his garden. "Grilled chives and rosemary," Laurita said, "they just speak to each other." He makes a bed of fresh herbs on the grill, underneath what's cooking, to infuse a smoky herb flavoring to it all. And he also loves experimenting with different smoked salts on watermelon.

At House 406 in Northbrook, proprietor Jen Eisen is celebrating fresh arugula. A little raspberry vinaigrette brings together a nice salad of the hearty leaves with burrata (fresh mozzarella and cream). The little salads are a simple yet refreshing, tasty toast to summer.

At Autre Monde, Partridge is putting lovely freshly grown lettuce leaves and pretty sweet violets and other edible flowers to work in stunning and delicious, classic salads. Her favorite this time of year is Salade Gourmande, which is your basic chef's salad. She follows the standard construction, which showcases meats (usually duck) that are cured, poached or confit (a preservation technique involving salting and cooking meat). At Autre Monde, meats are prepared these ways, in-house.

In Partridge's Salade Gourmande, the meats are on a bed of fresh, crispy seasonal greens and tossed in a tangy vinaigrette dressing. "The flavors are a perfect melding of the richness of the meats," she said. The rich, fatty duck meat is balanced by the crispy farm greens.

Autre Monde is sourcing red and green oak leaf lettuces, red and green bibb lettuces and gem lettuces from Nichols Farm in Marengo. This time of year, there are plenty to pick from.

Partridge's vinaigrette is a bright, homemade dressing made with Champagne vinegar and lavender honey in extra virgin olive oil with some salt and pepper. A freshly chopped shallot adds another pop of flavor.

Two or three tiny, bright, colorful sweet violets on top bring the salad together. You can use any edible flowers, but Partridge said violets add some pepperiness. "This is the kind of salad that is fun to pull together when the farm season is at its height," she said.

Partridge calls the recipe "deceptive simplicity. When people order it, they are thrilled with the experience of what actually happens on the plate."

Earlier this season, Sarah Grueneberg, chef at Monteverde in Chicago, won the James Beard Foundation award for Best

Salade Gourmande (Classic Chef's Salad)

Serves 4

- 12-15 crisp lettuce leaves
- 1/2 pound duck rilette
- 1/2 pound duck prosciutto
- 1/2 pound duck confit
- 12 fresh seasonal berries
- 12 fresh sweet violets or other edible flowers

1. Toss lettuce leaves lightly in vinaigrette dressing and arrange on four plates. Top each plate with 1/4 of each type of duck meats. Add a few fresh berries on top of each salad. Finish with 2 to 3 sweet violets or other edible flowers.

VINAIGRETTE

- 1/4 cup Champagne vinegar
- 1 cup high quality extra virgin olive oil
- 1 shallot, freshly chopped
- 1/2 teaspoon lavender honey
- Salt and pepper, to taste

1. Whisk all ingredients together in small, non-reactive bowl, toss lightly to just coat the lettuce leaves.

— Beth Partridge, Autre Monde Cafe & Spirits

Chef: Great Lakes. But what she's excited about is all of the cilantro growing in abundance. "Cilantro is a great low-cost herb that anyone can use to add a fresh zip to a dish," she said. "Most chefs can use it more because of the accessible price point unlike some other herbs. It's also used in so many cultures, like Thai, Vietnamese, Mexican and others."

Grueneberg is using fresh, seasonal cilantro to make a delicious chimichurri-like sauce to dress up pork. "One of the dishes I'm super excited about right now is a dish we make with pork," she said. "We get in a whole Mangalitsa pig from 1936 Meadowbrook Farm (Benton Harbor, Mich.), and we make pork skewers from the loin," she said. "Part of the dish is this delicious herb oil, similar to a chimichurri."

Grueneberg takes cilantro stems and leaves, chops them fine and blends with olive oil, parsley and chives. You can make this at home, adding ingredients to desired consistency and flavor.

And to stretch seasonal produce Grueneberg reminded us: Don't forget the stems. They are full of flavor and packed with nutrition. "Mince them finely and use them for the flavor." She suggested reserving leaves for garnish only; "they're too tender to cook and will lose flavor," she said.

MY PET WORLD

How to help a shy dog gain confidence in you

By Cathy M. Rosenthal
Tribune Content Agency

Q: My adult daughter and her family have a female lab mix named Scooby. Despite my seeing her three to four times a year (they live in Atlanta), she is always afraid of me and will sometimes bark and growl at me. Eventually she calms down and I can pet her. Even though she jumps on our bed and seems glad to see us, she avoids me later. She also got very upset with my other son-in-law and never calmed down enough for him to pet her.

Is there anything that I can do to make her less apprehensive? I've tried treats, but have a hard time getting her to come over to take them. — James Cohen, Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

A: What a great guy you are to seek advice about bonding with your granddog Scooby.

Some may say that something bad must have happened to Scooby to make her so afraid of people. But that's not always the case. Some dogs may not have been properly socialized as a puppy or, like people, may be shyer than other dogs and stressed by social situations. Scooby may associate your visits with increased activity in the house, which may make her uneasy.

Scooby needs some confidence-building. There are ways to help her become a more confident dog all year-long, but I am going to focus on what you can do

STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Some dogs may not have been properly socialized as a puppy or, like people, may be shyer than other dogs and more stressed by social situations.

when you visit.

Scooby needs to know good things happen whenever you arrive. Bring her a treat, toy or chew you know she will enjoy. Make sure you are the one to give it to her and only give it to her in a quiet place. Put it on the ground, and then step back so she can check it out on her own.

Next, ask your daughter and her family if you can take over Scooby's care while you are there, like feeding her, taking her for her walks, and playing with her, if she will let you. Pets bond with their caretakers, so these activities can help build trust and show her you are part of the family.

You also should spend quiet time together, which helps Scooby associate calmness when you are around. Get up in the morning, while everyone is still sleeping, and spend time with her, either watching TV or sitting out in the backyard. Rather than face her, sit sideways to her, like two people watching a baseball game, and wait for her to come to you. This body language is less intimidating and makes it easier for shy dogs to approach.

Speak softly to her and give her a few tasty treats. Your extended arm might scare her, so toss some strong-smelling treats on the ground a few feet away from you, eventually tossing them closer to you as she gets more comfortable with your new friendship.

Just be present with her and don't force anything to happen. Don't make sudden movements or use loud, booming voices that could startle her. Do these things on every visit, and eventually Scooby will be relaxed and happy to see her grandpa from Fort Lauderdale.

Q: I was very interested in your answer to Michelle from Naugatuck, Conn., about painting the house with birds in the home. I took my birds to my daughter's house to avoid fumes from roof coating. It was so stressful for them. I will never do it again. But my house needs painting. If there is a 100 percent safe paint product, I would love to know what it is.
— Michelle, Oro Valley, Ariz.

A: Sadly, there is no 100 percent safe paint product for birds. The low Volatile Organic Compounds and no VOC paints mentioned in the previous column are your best options. If you can't take your bird someplace else while you paint, then use only these paints and move your bird to a room in the home not being painted that day. Close the door, close the air vent, and open a window in that room to keep fresh air circulating for your bird. Move your bird back into the painted room only after the paint thoroughly dries.

La-Z-Boy owner wants warranty explanation

I purchased a recliner from the La-Z-Boy store in Monmouth Junction, N.J., on July 31, 2013. When it was delivered in September, there was a problem with the way the fabric was put on the back of the chair so I called and complained. It was picked up and delivered again in October, but they sent me the exact same chair with the exact same problems. The chair also did not recline properly and kept making a loud thump when pulled up (which never went away). It was picked up again and returned. But then I had to schedule service on the mechanism. A technician came on Nov. 29, 2013, to repair the problem.

I am now having a problem again. When I recline the chair, it does not stay in position. So I had to call La-Z-Boy's Comfort Care department and they told me the parts and mechanism have a lifetime warranty, but I had to pay $116.49 to have the problem assessed and repaired. I had to give them payment right there, over the phone, for them to send someone out.

I have been extremely unhappy from the start, and I do not think I should have to pay $116.49 to have the chair repaired. I thought it would last for a long time. I had one before (not a La-Z-Boy) that lasted for over 15 years. The quality of La-Z-Boy's product is not as they advertise

Liz, Monroe Twp., N.J.

My initial guess was that Liz's recliner has a limited lifetime warranty that covers parts for a longer period than labor. To confirm, I emailed Amy Hellebuyck, La-Z-Boy residential manager for brand content and public relations. She responded that yes, the cost of labor had expired from Liz's warranty and that was why she incurred a $116.49 charge. Hellebuyck explained the warranty specific to Liz's recliner:

"La-Z-Boy offers a lifetime warranty against manufacturing defects on the parts of the frame, mechanism and springs, for as long as the original purchaser owns the product and can supply their proof of purchase. Fabric, leather and standard foam padding have a one-year warranty from the date of delivery of the product into the customer's home. Labor to repair or replace any parts is covered for one year from the date of delivery."

She offered to refund Liz her $116.49 fee "because customer service is very important to La-Z-Boy."

Liz responded, "Thank you so much for your help.

It is nice to know there are people out there that still care."

As a result of Liz's inquiry, I decided to contact an expert on warranties: Anthony Giorgianni, Consumer Reports finance editor. Giorgianni was a fount of warranty information. Below are some of his best.

■ Per the Federal Trade Commission, all retailers must make warranties available to consumers prior to a product's purchase. Request it if you don't see it.

■ About every product purchase comes with an implied warranty — or warranty of merchantability — which means a product will do what a reasonable person would expect it to. This warranty is typically in effect for four years, and exists unless legally excluded. Several states, including Illinois, allow such exclusions, meaning a product can be labeled and sold "as is."

■ An express warranty is one that is clearly stated orally or in writing (hence, it is expressed) and guarantees a level of quality and reliability that ensures a product will be fixed or replaced by the manufacturer for no additional charge.

■ Many manufacturers will make good on an express warranty even if it has expired. But Giorgianni advises: "Don't go in with guns blazing. Tell the manufacturer how much you love the product and how disappointed you are that it didn't last."

■ Conduct an internet search of your issue to see if there has been a recall on the product. If a recall exists, your repair/replace-ment will be free.

■ If your internet search results in lots of product complaints similar to yours, document them for use in building a stronger case with the manufacturer.

BOOKS

Favorite books of 2017 — so far

From heart-pounding horror to true-life tragedy, writer offers his picks for first half of the year

By John Warner
Chicago Tribune

American publishing, like Hollywood, tends to hold its prestige releases for the fall. In the summer we get superhero movies and beach reads, but potential prizewinners will make their way into the world in September and beyond.

Fall will see new books from Jesmyn Ward, Jennifer Egan, Jeffrey Eugenides and Nicole Krauss. Best-selling literary fiction writers Celeste Ng and Tom Perrotta have new books on the horizon. And for those on the more populist end of things, Andy Weir will be releasing his follow-up to "The Martian."

But as I look back on my reading from the first half of the year, I can see that every week is a good week for new books, unlike Hollywood.

The 2017 Midyear Biblioracle Book Awards

Book I Most Want Mayor Rahm Emanuel to Read

Based on his threadbare proposal to require proof of a "future plan" for graduating high school students, the mayor needs to read Tressie McMillan Cottom's "Lower Ed: The Troubling Rise of For-Profit Colleges in the New Economy," which chronicles what happens when we require additional credentials without care or planning. Placing the responsibility on students means more money going to shady operators with little learning or economic advancement to show for it.

Book I Read Through Parted Fingers

I love legitimately scary books because they're so rare. Dan Chaon's "Ill Will" is a deliciously unsettling experience exploring the unreliability of memory and the capacity of anyone to do evil. Runner-up: "Broken River" by J. Robert Lennon is a tense little psychological thriller where the threat of bad stuff happening looms over every moment.

A True Story You'll Hardly Believe

"Killers of the Flower Moon: The Osage Murders and the Birth of the FBI" by David Grann. At one point, thanks to oil wealth, the Osage people were among the richest Americans, which made them targets for exploitation and murder. It took the FBI in the earliest days of J. Edgar Hoover to solve the killings. Amazing history revealed.

Book That's Worth Crossing International Borders

"Fugue States" by Pasha Malla. As of yet, this has only been published in Canada, which seems silly because it's a wonderfully wry and twisty story that's a buddy comedy with Pynchonian DNA. The eventual American publisher can feel free to put that blurb on the back of the book.

Book That Delivered an Emotional Blow When I Wasn't Ready for It

When I think of Jami Attenberg, what first comes to mind is the sardonic humor that runs through her work. But her newest book, "All Grown Up," the story of a woman examining her life, builds to an emotional catharsis that might've necessitated a tissue or two.

Book That Delivered an Emotional Blow, Even Though I Was Totally Prepared for It

There's something about Elizabeth Strout's books that makes me feel pain on behalf of her characters, so I knew that "Anything Is Possible" might throw me for an emotional loop. It succeeded — and then some.

Book Seemingly Written Just for Me

"The Show That Never Ends: The Rise and Fall of Prog Rock" by David Weigel. If the names King Crimson, Gentle Giant, Genesis, Yes and ELP conjure sounds inside your head, this book is for you. If not, that's OK; those of us on the inside of the pleasure that is progressive rock will continue to lord our superiority over others.

How many will wind up on my year-end list? All of them, if there's any justice, but there is neither justice nor room to talk about all worthy books.

Book recommendations from the Biblioracle

John Warner tells you what to read next based on the last five books you've read.

1. "Sweetbitter" by Stephanie Danler
2. "My (Part-Time) Paris Life: How Running Away Brought Me Home" by Lisa Anselmo
3. "The End of the Affair" by Graham Greene
4. "Beautiful Ruins" by Jess Walter
5. "Prince Charles: The Passions and Paradoxes of an Improbable Life" by Sally Bedell Smith

— Patricia P., Palatine

I'm sensing that Patricia enjoys books about characters struggling to do the right thing, despite themselves, which is maybe a good description for just about everyone. From a few years back, one of my favorites that fits this description is "Want Not" by Jonathan Miles.

1. "Leader of the Pack: An Andy Carpenter Mystery" by David Rosenfelt
2. "The Murder of Roger Ackroyd: A Hercule Poirot Mystery" by Agatha Christie
3. "Banana Cream Pie Murder: A Hannah Swensen Mystery" by Joanne Fluke
4. "The Last Chance Olive Ranch: A China Bayles Mystery" by Susan Wittig Albert
5. "Lean Mean Thirteen: Stephanie Plum, No. 13" by Janet Evanovich

— Susan G., Skokie

One of the great things about this gig is hearing from readers who introduce me to books with which even the Biblioracle is unfamiliar. In this case, I didn't know the Andy Carpenter mysteries, which feature an adorable golden retriever named Tara as a sidekick. Sold. This mystery isn't part of a series, but it's genuine good fun: "The Writing Class" by Jincy Willett.

1. "Born to Run" by Bruce Springsteen
  2. "The Wonder" by Emma Donoghue
  3. "Over the Plain Houses" by Julla Franks
  4. "The Story of the Lost Child: Neapolitan Novels, Book Four" by Elena Ferrante
  5. "The All of It" by Jeannette Halen
- Cindy M., Sleepy Hollow

Here's a great family drama that I think fits the bill: "The World Without You" by Joshua Henkin.

How kids' sports can cause marital strife

"It's out of control." "It's ridiculous." "Sports isn't everything." "It's just a game." "My husband is so tough on him and sometimes it's just too much for me."

These are the words of a few different moms I spoke with on the subject of their kids playing competitive sports. Then I interviewed their husbands.

"She just doesn't realize, kids only get one chance and if they miss too many games or practices, it can hurt them." "My wife gives them a pass and makes excuses." "She wants them to have fun and doesn't see it as serious involvement."

As a parent who has sat in the bleachers for many years watching my kids play competitive sports, I didn't really have to do these interviews to corroborate my belief that countless couples just can't see eye to eye when it comes to their kids' sports.

Mom and Dad have many differences, which can include what the goal of the sport is, how parents should behave during games and what they should say to the kid before or after the game.

"If you ask a kid what they dislike about playing sports, they will say, 'The car ride home,'" said one dad I interviewed. "My rule is that I never say a word to my son at a game. I don't make a sound. Shut up and let the coach coach."

Everyone is entitled to his or her own opinion, but different views on these issues can definitely cause some tension in a marriage, not to mention the added stress it can cause the athlete.

So, how can parents work out their differences and help give their kids the best sports experience possible? Christie Southern is a North Shore-based mental strength performance coach who has been working with athletes and student athletes for 30 years. She said her first piece of advice for parents is to help kids play sports for the right reasons.

"There are intrinsic rewards — the joy, the fun of the game, building confidence and self-esteem, team camaraderie. Those are the best reasons to play competitive sports," said Southern, who holds certifications in mental strength performance and mental game coaching from the American College of Sports Medicine. "Not for the trophies and the recognition."

Southern said it is the intrinsic rewards that keep kids playing year after year and which helps them ride out disappointments.

"If they are playing because they love it, they will keep playing even when times get tough," she said.

When asked how to talk to your kids after a game, Southern said it's important not to make comparisons to a sibling or to other players.

"The conversation should be about growth, improvement and learning from mistakes," she said.

Southern's examples of what to say:

- "You're on your way!"
- "You're hitting the ball so much farther now."
- "I'm seeing improvement."

Examples of what NOT to say:

- "Your team is in first!"
- "You scored 10 baskets."
- "You finally got that skill down."

In the defense of the ultra-competitive dads out there, there is such a thing as being too soft, according to Southern.

"Be careful not to overprotect the athlete," she said. "The 'everyone deserves a trophy' mentality is being too soft. Saying 'It wasn't fair' or 'You should have won' prevents kids from learning the tough lessons. In life, their bosses aren't going to be that way."

Here are Southern's three tips for parents sitting in the bleachers:

- No sideline coaching or scolding, and watch your body language. Remember that your child is watching your reaction to everything throughout the game.
- Agree on when and how much you are going to talk to your athlete before and after the game. Less is always better.
- Agree on what to say and what not to say to him or her. Certain things help and certain things don't. "I'm so proud of your teamwork" helps. "Your shot was really off today" does not.

Two big sources of conflict in a marriage are money and kids, and that includes the kids' athletics. So, like any other disagreement, the key to staying happy together is talking about it, understanding and being open-minded to the other's opinion, and, like Southern suggested, coming to agreements on how to approach the kids' sports.

Not only will this show your athlete that Mom and Dad truly care, but it will send the message that the two of you are on the same team.

Tips on avoiding ticks during your next hike

By Dr. Eve Glazier and Dr. Elizabeth Ko

Ask The Doctors

Dear Doctor: I've been reading a lot of warnings about the recent wet weather causing an abundance of ticks and their potential to cause disease. I knew about Lyme disease, but now Powassan virus? What's that? And just how dangerous are ticks?

Dear Reader: Ticks are external parasites that, because they feed on blood, are quite efficient at transmitting disease. In each of the three life stages that a tick goes through after hatching, it needs blood to survive. Depending on the species, ticks will feed on mammals (that's us), birds, reptiles and amphibians.

A variety of ticks throughout the United States can transmit more than a dozen dangerous and sometimes deadly diseases. These include Lyme disease, Rocky Mountain spotted fever, tularemia, and Colorado tick fever, to name a few of the most commonly known. The tick picks up the disease while feeding on an infected host, and then can transmit it through its saliva during future feedings.

One of the lesser-known diseases is Powassan virus, a flu-like illness that can cause inflammation in the brain. It is spread by several types of ticks found in the northeastern states and in the Great Lakes region. The disease is fatal in up to 15 percent of individuals who show symptoms. About half of those who survive face ongoing neurological difficulties.

Powassan virus was once rare, with about two reported cases per year between 1950 and the early 2000s. That number has risen to 75 reported cases in the last decade, or close to eight per year. Some experts think this may be due to increased awareness in diagnosing the disease.

However, Lyme disease, with close to 30,000 confirmed cases each year, remains the most common tick-borne illness in the U.S. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the total may actually be as high as 300,000 infected individuals per year, when unconfirmed cases are factored in.

While there are some species of ticks that don't carry disease, without specialized knowledge it's almost impossible to tell them apart from those that do. As a result, the best advice is to protect yourself, your family and your pets against all tick bites.

Ticks prefer areas that are moist and humid, and concentrate in wooded and grassy areas. They can't jump or fly, so they perch at the tips of grasses and shrubs, where they can easily attach to a host as it brushes by.

To avoid tick bites:

■ When in grassy or brushy areas, wear long sleeves, long pants and close-toed shoes. Tuck pants into socks. Light-colored clothing makes spotting ticks easier.

■ Insect repellents that contain 20 percent DEET may be helpful. Some experts say picaridin is even better. Reapply according to manufacturer instructions.

■ Treat clothing, boots and tents with products containing 0.5 percent permethrin, which stays effective through several washings. Pre-treated clothing and gear is also available and may offer longer protection.

■ After spending time outdoors, be sure to do a tick check. Visually scan all areas of your body, including your scalp and hair.

Does grapefruit make blood pressure plummet?

By Joe Graedon and Teresa Graedon

King Features Syndicate

Q: I take nifedipine for high blood pressure. Lately the medicine wasn't controlling my blood pressure, so my doctor added lisinopril. That brought the blood pressure down, but it made me cough.

When I went back to my doctor, she dropped the lisinopril and increased the dose of nifedipine. My BP was in the 150/90 range, still on the high side.

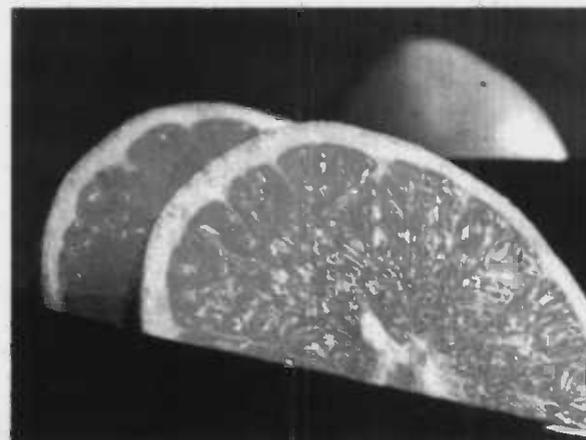

My medicine bottle says to "avoid grapefruit," but the past few weeks I gave in to temptation and bought several. I continued my medication and ate a grapefruit every day. My blood pressure readings have been great: 118/67, 126/72, 114/68!

When I ran out of grapefruit, I was shocked to see the readings climb again. So now I need to go get more grapefruit.

A: Dozens of medications are affected by grapefruit. They include some cholesterol-lowering drugs (atorvastatin, lovastatin, simvastatin), heart-rhythm medicines (amiodarone, dronedarone) and blood-pressure pills (felodipine, nifedipine).

Grapefruit juice can raise blood levels and magnify the effects of the medicine. That means grapefruit also might increase the risk of adverse reactions.

Grapefruit all by itself can lower blood pressure (Critical Reviews in Food Science and Nutrition, Feb. 11, 2017). You shouldn't count on it as a substitute for your medication, however. You have seen how grapefruit increases the effectiveness of your nifedipine. Side effects such as headache, dizziness, flushing and fluid retention may be more troublesome. Please discuss your grapefruit tactic with your doctor.

Q: I have been taking zolpidem (the generic version of Ambien) for several years. I've had horrific heartburn for the past three months and was put on Nexium.

I experimented three nights ago and just took myself off the zolpidem. During that time, I haven't had any heartburn at all. Nor have I had to take Nexium. I feel much better in the morning without the hangover from this sleeping med.

A: Many people don't realize that zolpidem can cause digestive distress for some patients. "Dyspepsia," an old-fashioned term for indigestion, is listed as a frequent side effect. It may include nausea or vomiting as well as heartburn.

Q: I have been searching online for legitimate Canadian pharmacies. They all require a prescription. My doctor says it is illegal for her to write a prescription for a Canadian pharmacy.

What can I do?

A: Canadian pharmacies will accept standard prescriptions from U.S. doctors. Your physician does not need to do anything special to help you fill your prescription in Canada.

Savings on some prescription medicines can be substantial. One reader wrote: "When I buy my Xarelto from a Canadian pharmacy, I get 84 pills for $200. The first time I got this prescription, I went to my local pharmacy and found out the price was $555 for 30 pills. No way can I afford that!"

You are wise to be cautious about which online pharmacy you use. Some unscrupulous websites trade on the good reputation Canadian drugstores have earned. Make sure it is a legitimate Canadian pharmacy before you send or fax your U.S. prescription. We tell you how in our Guide to Saving Money on Medicines. ## Jury still out over the pros, cons of tri-parenting

By Jennifer Peltz
Associated Press

Sixteen-year-old Madison's family clustered for a photo in a California courtroom, commemorating the day it finally became official that she has three parents.

The adults she calls Mom, Dad and Mama were all there for her birth, after the women decided to have a child together and approached a male friend. They share time with Madison and input on raising her. Their Christmas Day traditions involve all of them.

But legally, Victoria Bianchi became her daughter's parent only this fall, joining a small but growing number of Americans who have persuaded courts and legislatures to give legal recognition to what's sometimes called "tri-parenting."

"I just felt like I've been holding my breath for the last 16 years," Bianchi says. "She's already been my daughter. ... She's finally, legally mine."

Bianchi made use of a 2013 California law declaring that a child can have more than two parents. A similar law took effect in Maine last year. Courts in at least 10 other states, including New York just this winter, have designated third parents in recent years, even as some courts and experts have raised qualms that more parents means more potential conflict.

American courts have for decades granted some rights to grandparents, stepparents and others in children's lives, but parents have uniquely broad rights and responsibilities.

Advocates say acknowledging a third parent — whether on a birth certificate, by adoption or in a custody or child support ruling — reflects the modern realities of some families: gay couples who set out to have a child with a friend of the opposite gender, men seeking to retain paternal roles after DNA shows someone else is a biological father, and other situations.

JULIO CORTEZ/AP

Sam Hunt, left, and his partner, Darren Greenblatt, have a 7-year-old daughter with her biological mother, but things have not been easy, as the couple and the mother have fought over custody.

The landscape is only getting more complex. For instance, new techniques designed to avoid some rare diseases now allow for a child to be born with a small amount of DNA from a third person.

Without legal rights, some parents and kids face being cut off from each other, says Cathy Sakimura, of the San Francisco-based National Center for Lesbian Rights, which helped draft California's law.

But some courts have rejected extending the bounds of parenthood. A 2014 Wyoming Supreme Court decision wondered about parents multiplying as a mom or dad had new relationships.

While there's little if any research directly on tri-parenting, experts are divided on how it may affect children.

Anita Jones Thomas, a University of Indianapolis professor who heads the American Psychological Association's child-and-family section, sees potential pluses. "That extra sense of social support has really been found to be beneficial for children," she says.

But W. Bradford Wilcox, a University of Virginia sociologist, points to research — not on tri-parenting specifically — showing that children in stable, two-parent families do better on average educationally, emotionally and otherwise than kids who aren't.

"This is going to be a family form where children are exposed to more complexity and more instability," he says.

When a quip about having a baby together turned into a serious discussion, Kitty Stillfusen, her longtime friend Darren Greenblatt and his now-husband, Sam Hunt, didn't foresee how complex tri-parenting would get.

The girl was born in 2009, with Greenblatt's and Stillfusen's genes and Hunt's last name. They spent part of the infant's early months together in Stillfusen's New Jersey home. Later, the Manhattan-based men rented a house in Stillfusen's seaside hometown in summers, her busy season managing her family's restaurant. She and the pre-schooler spent winters in Costa Rica.

"We're a family. We're the real thing," Stillfusen told Marie Claire magazine in 2011.

By 2013, Stillfusen was planning to marry a boyfriend in California and enroll the girl in school there. The men objected and sued for custody.

Finding that Hunt was a "psychological parent," a New Jersey judge awarded custody in 2015 to all three adults and nixed Stillfusen's planned move. All now live in New Jersey.

Hunt wasn't declared a legal parent, however. The judge said lawmakers needed to decide whether to give tri-parenting such recognition, a social policy choice likely to have "far-reaching implications."

Regardless, Hunt, a teacher, says the ruling gave him "a sense of security and peace" after "the pain of having to defend that relationship and prove that relationship."

But to Stillfusen, tri-parenting has turned into a two-against-one fight.

The judge found she and Greenblatt were fit parents. "Why do we need a third?" she asks. And she wonders where will courts now draw the line on who's a parent in other families.

"At what point does it end?" says Stillfusen, now a teacher in training. "How many parents can a child possibly have?"

She now thinks tri-parenting is "logically dangerous territory" that risks creating turmoil around kids. Greenblatt and Hunt still believe it can work, with detailed planning.

"We were naive," says Greenblatt, a fashion entrepreneur and bakery co-founder. "Our example should be a cautionary tale."

"But then again, we have this beautiful, smart, funny, amazing kid," he says.

Tri-parenting hasn't been uncomplicated for Victoria Bianchi, former partner Kimberli Bonner and friend Mark Shumway. When Bonner gave birth to Madison in 2000, the law allowed for only two legal parents, so Bianchi couldn't adopt unless one of the others gave up parental status. Shumway knew it was important to Bianchi. But "I could not do that, sign away the rights to my daughter," he says.

Bianchi was heartbroken and stung by the limitations of not being a legal mom. The insurance estimator cried after trying to register the girl for kindergarten and being told: "Oh, you're not a parent?"

Still, the three adults collaborated: "Madison was the most important thing to all of us, so we just wanted, whatever the differences, to work through it," says Bonner, a tech company claims adjuster. Shumway, a real estate agent, appreciates their three-parent family so much he hopes to form another with his husband and a woman.

Madison Bonner-Bianchi says her relationship with her parents resembles anyone else's — "I just happen to have three of them."

Now 17 and busy with school, sports and friends, she allows it sometimes takes effort to round up opinions from three parents.

"But the big picture is: You just have more people there to support you and be there for you and love you no matter what," she says.

"Honestly, I look up to all of them." And so, one October day, she and her family assembled in a Bay Area court for Bianchi to adopt her as a third parent.

"Do you understand what this means?" Bianchi recalls the judge asking.

Without any doubt, she said yes.

David Crary contributed to this report.

MUSIC

Teenage Elvis performer pays tribute at Eisenhower Library

BY BRUCE INGRAM
Pioneer Press

Thanks to his mom, teenage Elvis Presley tribute artist Hugo Colin already knew a lot of Elvis songs when he was asked to make his debut in his kindergarten talent show.

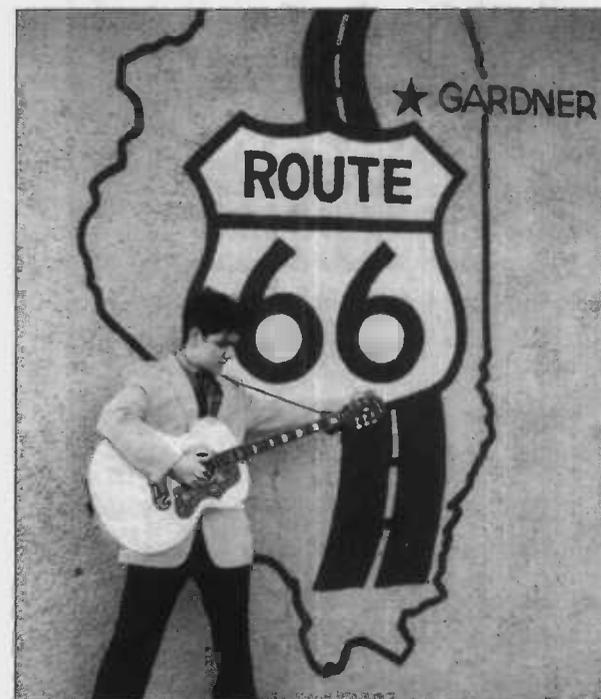

"Since he learned how to speak, he was always singing Elvis songs," said Paula Colin, a longtime Elvis fan who recalls exposing Hugo to Elvis music and movies more or less in the cradle. "He was doing Elvis at 3 years old."

And we're not talking about just any old Elvis music here. We're talking about his mother's favorites and her son's as well — Presley's classic 1950s Sun Records and RCA recordings. The songs Colin will sing in a one-hour set July 27 at the Eisenhower Public Library in Harwood Heights.

He'll perform the big hits from that era like "All Shook Up," "That's All Right, Mama," "Heartbreak Hotel," "Hound Dog," and "Jailhouse Rock," as well as lesser-known B-sides such as the ballad "I was the One." Colin personally favors Elvis' ballads and Gospel numbers, such as "Peace in the Valley" and "Take My Hand, Precious Lord."

"People forget about Elvis in the '50s," said Colin. "He really became iconic in the '70s. But I like his music from the '50s because it was the beginning of everything — for him and for rock 'n' roll."

Colin was 8 years old when he saw Elvis tribute artist Rick Saucedo performing at a carnival and realized there were other people out there doing what he loved, on a much larger scale. Also that it was possible to perform in the style of Elvis, but still as himself, and add Elvis history and lore while introducing the songs.

Now the Lane Tech sophomore is 16 and performing more than ever — even accompanying himself on acoustic guitar when there's a glitch in the karaoke music that typically backs him. After wowing the crowds in school talent shows through the eighth grade, he decided he wanted to keep on going, performing on a volunteer basis for fundraisers at churches, senior centers and the like.

The entire Colin clan, including four siblings, often helps at the shows, which are just now beginning to go pro with bookings such as the Eisenhower Library. A move that might be necessary to cover expenses, considering the performer's habit of handing out a dozen teddy bears while singing "(Let Me Be Your) Teddy Bear."

Colin will be performing a whole lotta Elvis songs at the library show (and encouraging the crowd to dance as usual), but he still won't be performing his own personal favorite, "An American Trilogy" — a matter of not quite feeling up to it.

"It's been my favorite since I was 3 years old, but I don't feel I have the maturity for it yet," he explained. "I'm not ready to perform a song that has that much emotional substance. I want to do justice to every song, so I'll wait a couple of years for that one."

FAMILY FRIENDLY

Digging dinosaurs teach kids about past and future

BY MYRNA PETLICKI
Pioneer Press

Kids in kindergarten through fifth grade will learn about dig operations and discoveries when Lisa Zago presents Dinosaur Hunters, 6:30-7:30 p.m. July 24 at Skokie Public Library, 5215 Oakton St.

"Dinosaurs open up minds not just to dinosaurs but to many other sciences — chemistry, physics, math and computer science," Zago said. "Dinosaurs may help us to understand their time on Earth and their extinction" which offers clues to "what lies ahead for the future of our planet."

Registration is required. For details, call 847-673-7774 or go to www.skokie.library.info.

NOW PLAYING

"Spider-Man: Homecoming" ★★★

PG-13, 2:13, action

Tom Holland once again slips into the suit to lead his own Spidey film, which starts with a callback to "Captain America: Civil War," when Tony Stark (Robert Downey Jr.) gave the high schooler a chance to tag in with the Avengers. And remember those aliens that destroyed New York in "The Avengers"? Their exotic and powerful detritus has been scooped up by a working class contractor, Toomes (Michael Keaton), who proves to be a local foe for Spidey. Directed by Jon Watts, "Spider-Man: Homecoming" slots right into the Marvel Cinematic Universe, hitting that on-brand fun, but it's also in the vein of a John Hughes classic. — Katie Walsh, Tribune News Service

"Despicable Me 3" ★ 1/2

PG, 1:30, animated

"Despicable Me 3" relies on audience familiarity with the characters and universe, and then throws subplots on top of that. Two new characters are introduced in this installment: Balthazar Bratt, the antagonist, is a washed up child actor from the '80s with a mullet, a keytar, and shoulder pads. The other new character is Dru (Steve Carell), Gru's long-lost twin brother.

After losing their jobs, Gru (also Steve Carell) and family head to Fredonia to meet Dru, the head of the family farming business, a front for super-villainy. Eventually, they have to unite to fight Balthazar, who plans to destroy Hollywood with bubble gum and lasers. — K.W.

"Baby Driver" ★★★

R, 1:53, drama/comedy

Each of Edgar Wright's films is a tribute to a specific genre, and his latest film, "Baby Driver," which he wrote and directed, is firmly in the zone of loving homage, this time taking on the heist film. The trailers for "Baby Driver" almost make it look like a spoof — teen dreamboat Ansel Elgort plays a getaway driver named Baby, who always has to be listening to music while he drives, due to the tinnitus from a childhood car accident. It almost seems like a parody of "Drive, but Wright takes the concept from parody to excellent example of the form and makes it a love note to classic rock and soul. Baby keeps multiple iPods on deck, and the beat has to hit just right for him to tap into his driving mojo. — K.W.

"Wonder Woman" ★★★ 1/2

PG-13, 2:21, action

Diana (Gal Gadot) trains like a fiend for the day she will confront Ares, God of War and learn the secret of her origin story. One day, a plane goes down near Diana's Island home carrying American spy Steve Trevor (Chris Pine). Diana and Steve travel to Europe, where World War I is grinding toward a conclusion. Doctor Poison (Elena Anaya), working for the Germans, is tolling away on a deadly nerve gas. The movie is no reinvention of a formula; it's simply much better than usual iteration. — Michael Phillips, Chicago Tribune

"Transformers: The Last Knight" ★ 1/2

PG-13, 2:26, Action

The new "Transformers" movie sits with the previous sequels, so be warned or be encouraged, depending on your allegiance to the earlier movies. "Deep down inside, you begin to wonder: Has my life been wasted?" This is Academy Award-winning Anthony Hopkins talking, as he shovels mythological exposition for the benefit of Mark Wahlberg, the subtitle of this fifth "Transformers" movie, "The Last Knight." Wahlberg returns as the American

Joe, leader of the resistance. — M.P.

She graduated from Canton High School in 1946. Marge attended the Lutheran Seminary in Maywood, Ill., in preparation for the four years (1960-1964) she and her husband spent serving in India as missionaries for the Lutheran Church. Marge became a reporter for the Pekin Daily Times in 1967, Assistant Editor of Tazewell County News in 1969 and served on the first Peoria Journal Star Advisory Board in 1970. She joined the Peoria Journal Star in 1974, holding several positions before being promoted to Managing Editor in 1979. While at the Peoria Journal Star, she achieved many firsts: first woman supervisor in the newsroom, first woman on the copy desk, first woman Sunday Edition Editor and the first woman Managing Editor of a major Illinois newspaper. Marge served as President of the Illinois Associated Press Editors Association in 1990. She retired from the Peoria Journal Star in 1991. Marge was also the first woman to be named to the Morton Civil Defense Board (1969) and selected Morton Citizen of the Year (1971). She helped to organize the Morton Junior Women's Club (1966) and served as its president (1970). Marge was President of the Morton YWCA Board (1970), as well as the Morton Community Chest Drive Chairman (1971) and Director (1972). Marge was member of the Salem Lutheran Church, Peoria, Ill., for 50 years. Visitation will be held Friday, August 11, from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. at Salem Lutheran Church in Peoria. A memorial service will take place at Salem Lutheran Church Saturday, August 12, at 11 a.m. A luncheon will be served following the service. Memorials can be made to Salem Lutheran Church.

Camaro celebrates 50 years as Chevy's affordable sports coupe

BY CASEY WILLIAMS
Chicago Tribune

As the 50th anniversary celebration winds down for the Chevrolet Camaro, it's right back where it started: playing second wheel to Ford's Mustang in the sales charts. Yet Camaro carves a distinct place in pony car Americana both past and present, renowned for stoplight sprints, countless first dates and pacing the Indianapolis 500 nine times.

"Customers appreciate engine horsepower and better handling — and how it makes them feel inside," said Todd Christensen, Camaro marketing manager. "There's a lot of passion with Camaro owners that they bring into the Chevy brand."

Camaro was launched for model year 1967 to counter Ford's Mustang and give baby boomers something unique in Chevy showrooms.

Chevrolet already offered the Corvair, Chevelle and Corvette, but the Camaro was sportier than a Chevelle, more powerful than the Corvair and was affordable, unlike Corvette. It was quick too. Car and Driver ran a 1968 Z28 0-60 mph in 5.3 seconds, one-tenth quicker than a Mustang with the same-sized 302 cubic-inch engine.

Designers abandoned Coke-bottle styling with the second generation in 1970, conveying Camaro from the muscle car era, through disco, and into the Reagan administration. Styling initially cribbed Ferrari with large egg-crate grilles and fastback roof-lines, but added plastic bumpers and a lot more weight to comply with safety regulations. By 1980, V-8-powered Camaros ran 0-60 mph in 9.5 seconds.

Times had changed, but Camaro was relatively quick and looked handsome. Unlike Mustang, which evolved from a big muscle car to the ridiculous Mustang II — the Pinto-esque Shetland of pony cars — Camaro was unswerving.

"Among classic Camaros, I have come to appreciate the second-generation cars with their Ferrari-like front ends," said Larry Edsall, author of "Camaro: A Legend Reborn." "Camaro never went through a Mustang II phase."

The smaller, sharper third-generation 1982 Camaro needed less fuel to be fun. Base models had four-cylinder engines, but the 235-horsepower IROC filled the dreams of teenagers' minds and walls. A sleek 1993 restyle eventually begat the 325-horsepower SS. Performance was back, but sales were kneecapped by SUV popularity, sending Camaro on hiatus after 2002. Sales were about one-third of Mustang.

The restrained styling of the first generation was gone, replaced by ever-longer noses, greenhouse canopies and cheap plastic. Camaro needed to return to the style and performance that originally made it popular.

Soul-searching took eight years, but when Tom Peters' retro-modern fifth-generation debuted for 2010, sales surpassed Mustang's (81,299 vs. 73,716). Buyers drew quick connections to the first-generation models and throttled engines as diverse as a 30-mpg V-6 or 580-horsepower supercharged V-8. An independent rear suspension placed ride and handling beyond Mustang's reach (temporarily).

This 2010 Chevrolet Camaro LT, the model's fifth generation, came after an eight-year hiatus. Designer Tom Peters' retro-modern take pushed sales past Ford's Mustang for a time.

"The fifth and sixth generations took more of their lineage from the first generation," Christensen said. "It got us into the pony car wars, set the standards. We sold high performance for those who value that, plus affordable models with smaller engines — same as today."

No automotive rivalry is more intense than Mustang vs. Camaro. While the original Mustang sold 559,451 in 1965, Camaro's first year saw just 220,906. Camaro out-sold Mustang when new models were introduced, but trailed after.

Solid rear axles diminished ride and handling on both, but Mustang's styling created a closer bond to the original. Virtually no design traits were shared between 1967 and 2002 Camaros. It was a car young people did not understand, and for which older generations felt no affection.

Camaro sales led after the 2010 overhaul, but the redesigned 2015 Mustang debuted with a standard independent rear suspension and drove like an Audi. Ford vanquished its foe in 2016. Compared with the Mustang's wide exotic stance, Camaro's conservative restyle on Cadillac's ATS architecture did nothing to halt the sales slide.

"The worst thing Chevrolet could do is start discounting Camaros in order to bump sales numbers up," said Ed Hellwig, executive editor at Edmunds.com "It needs to stick to its plan and drum up interest with small upgrades and special-edition models, a tactic Ford has traditionally used with Mustang."

For 2018, the 1LE Track Package adds a carbon fiber wing, front dive planes and adjustable suspension.

"Sales wars are nice, but at the expense of incentives, not so much," Christensen said. "The car is selling at a pretty good clip. The current sixth generation went more upscale; the base price is higher. The affordable 2.0-liter engine does well, but we lost some who bought the cheaper trim before."

For some, there's no substitute for a Chevrolet Camaro.

"While Ford's Mustang had a big head start, the Camaro was a Chevy, and no self-respecting Chevrolet fan would ever own a Ford," Edsall said. "It went out of production for a few years, but when it came back, it established a format for the 'modern muscle car.'"

Camaros now handle as well as they accelerate and are loaded with technology like Bose audio, wireless phone charging, Wi-Fi hotspots and Apple CarPlay/Android Auto. Drivers continue to complain about blind spots, but rear cameras and blind-spot sensors help. Available Magnetic Ride Control adjusts the suspension in real time.

Camaro serves as Chevrolet's affordable sport coupe with the turbo-four at $25,905, a junior Corvette in SS trim under $38,000, and all-out track beast ZL1 for $61,140. Choose the base turbo-four that achieves 31 mpg or the ZL1's 650-horsepower supercharged V-8 that shoves it 0-60 mph in 3.5 seconds.

"The Camaro is one of Chevrolet's longest-running and most well-known nameplates," Hellwig said. "Even if people don't buy it in big numbers, it's a stylish high-performance coupe that makes it an aspirational car — something every brand needs."

No matter what, Camaro will remain true to its mission.

"It should stand for the same things: Beautiful styling and performance value," Christensen said. "It has to have that recipe. Tastes change, but it will remain an enthusiasts' car."

STEVE WOLTMANN/UIC ATHLETICS

Illinois-Chicago gymnast Dalai Jamiyankhuu, center, was an "integral part" of the team as a freshman, according to his coach.

Jamiyankhuu perseveres through adversity

BY HEATHER RULE
Pioneer Press

Dalai Jamiyankhuu vividly remembers the team huddle prior to the Illinois-Chicago men's gymnastics team's first competition of the 2017 season.

The freshman listened as team captains said: "You've done these routines countless times, now just show it off and have fun," Jamiyankhuu said. "It doesn't matter what place you come in, as long as you do your job, hit that routine and own that routine."

That clicked. "I'm just going to have fun, do my best and show them that," said

Jamiyankhuu, who won all-around state titles as a junior and senior at Niles West and led the Wolves to their first team state title in 2016. "I just kept that in mind."

His freshman year at UIC actually didn't start until January. He spent the fall semester at Oakton Community College to raise his grade-point average, according to Flames coach Charley Nelson, and continued to train at his club gym, Lakeshore Academy.

When Jamiyankhuu joined his Flames teammates in January, he had to hit the ground running with less than two weeks until the team's first competition. "It was a little hard jumping in right away," Jamiyankhuu said. "It was just hopping on a speeding train and just trying to get used to everything."

Said Nelson: "For him to be able to step in and really be an integral part of our season last year was really impressive."

Jamiyankhuu, a Niles resident, competed in the still rings, vault, parallel bars and horizontal bar at the start of the season. The plan was to have him compete in the all-around, until he got injured.

Jamiyankhuu hurt his right shoulder on the high bar midway through the season. He rehabbed and cut back on routines, focusing on vault and floor exercise, two events that didn't require as much reliance on his shoulder.

Nelson said Jamiyankhuu is a competitor who executes his routines so well that he's in a perfect position to maintain his scores, even when the degree of difficulty increases. Jamiyankhuu makes the skills look easy, Nelson said.

"Part of that is his demeanor in competition," Nelson said. "He doesn't get rattled. He's never too high or too low."

Jamiyankhuu knows how important it is to be composed before competing. He can flip a switch when he needs to, and it's one of his strong suits, he said.

"I don't get too riled up," Jamiyankhuu said. "I keep myself in check."

His goal next year is to compete in the all-around. Nelson also sees him emerging as a leader on the team.

But for now, he has to contend with a shoulder injury again. Jamiyankhuu thinks he re-injured it a couple weeks ago. His shoulder was in so much pain that he couldn't even lift his backpack out of the car after practice one day.

Doctors told him they think a muscle in his shoulder is torn, according to Jamiyankhuu, adding that he plans to get an MRI in the next few weeks to know for certain.

Jamiyankhuu, who is originally from Mongolia, said he hopes to continue training and represent his native country at the world championships in October.

Even with the academic and injury setbacks, his freshman year in college was still a lot of fun, he said. He's also happy he chose UIC's gymnastics team.

"Being in a school in Chicago is kind of my thing," Jamiyankhuu said. "Exactly where I want to be."

Shipping up to Boston: Niles North grad Nader signs with Celtics

BY RYAN NILSSON
Pioneer Press

Niles North graduate Abdel Nader signed a four-year, $6 million contract with the Boston Celtics, according to the Boston Globe. The team announced the signing on Saturday.

Drafted by the Celtics in the second round of the 2016 NBA Draft, Nader was named the D-League Rookie of the Year after playing for the Maine Red Claws during the 2016-17 season.

The Iowa State product averaged 21.3 points, 6.2 rebounds, 3.9 assists and 1.0 steals per game as a forward with the Red Claws.

Nader, who also attended Maine East, shot 44.7 percent from the field and 34.9 percent from behind the 3-point line.

Nowak bound for LSU

After originally committing to pitch at Miami, Notre Dame College Prep graduate Brandon Nowak is now headed to LSU. The Tigers were the runner-up at this year's College World Series.

Nowak said in a Twitter message that he made the switch because Miami didn't have a roster spot for him anymore and the Hurricanes "said they didn't have the (scholarship) money they promised me anymore."

The Miami athletic communications department didn't respond to an email seeking comment.

Financial aid is what swayed Nowak to pick LSU. "They offered me a scholarship that I couldn't refuse," he said in a Twitter message.

Nowak has pitched at Oakton, a Division III junior college, the past two seasons.

The left-hander struck out 66 hitters in 55 1/3 innings (10.73 K/9) as a sophomore. He posted a 2.11 ERA while walking 17 and allowing 50 hits, which equates to a 1.21 WHIP. He was named to the All-Region 4 Team.

Rosales comes home

Following a day game against the Chicago White Sox on the South Side, Oakland Athletics shortstop Adam Rosales returned to Park Ridge to play a game with Park Ridge Baseball/Softball players on June 24.

Rosales, a Maine South graduate who played in the PRBS league growing up, stayed until after 9:30 p.m. to sign autographs and take pictures, according to an email from the league.

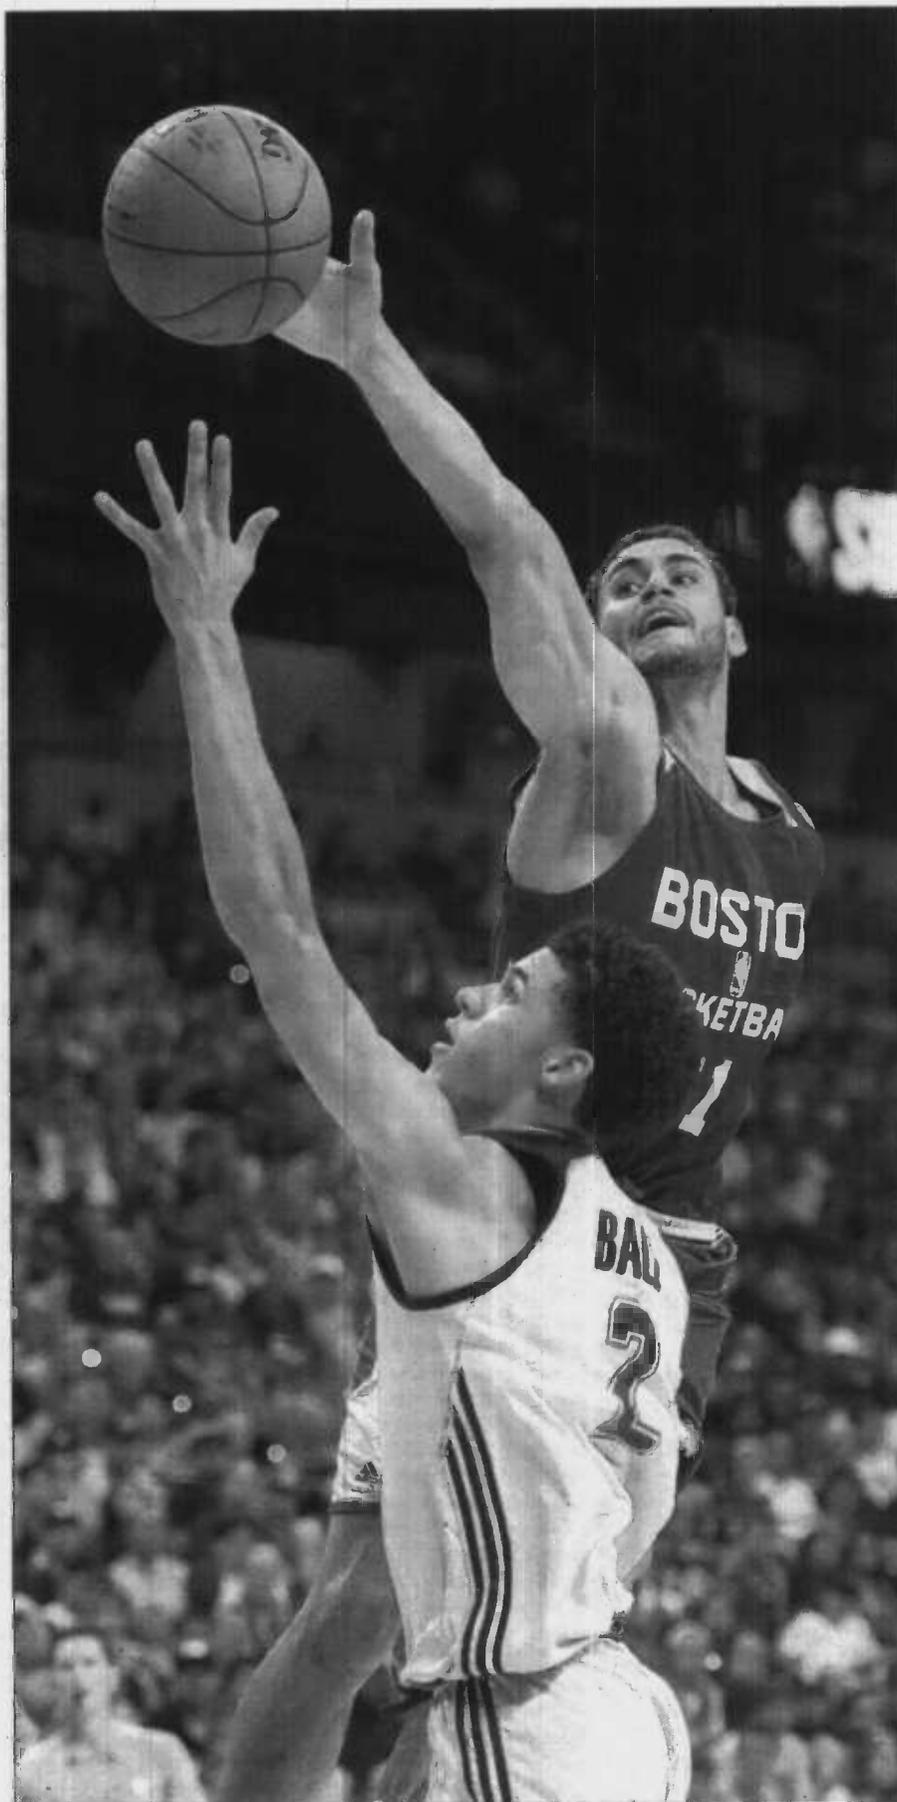

The event was part of Rosales' charity, Sandlot Nation, which he started last year.

"I've always wanted to give back to the game of baseball, and the sandlot games when we were kids were really important to me," Rosales was quoted as saying in a story on MLB.com. "I know how important it is to these young players to help mentor these young kids, and help them appreciate the purity of baseball."

His charity had hosted about a dozen events by early June, according to the MLB.com story.

Rosales, who debuted in the Major Leagues in 2008, had a .233 batting average and a .618 on-base plus slugging percentage in 193 at-bats this season through Sunday. He also has a .965 fielding percentage in 55 games at shortstop.

As officials leave the field, IHSA emphasizes recruitment, retention

BY STEVE REAVEN
Pioneer Press

Fans of any high school sport are used to seeing the raucous home crowds, the tension building during the final moments of a close game and the camaraderie in a pregame huddle between coaches and players.

Those facets of prep athletics aren't going anywhere, as the number of high school athletes has doubled nationally since Title IX took effect in 1972, according to the National Federation of State High School Associations.

One essential part of the high school athletics landscape, however, is trending in the opposite direction: The number of licensed officials.

Many states — including Illinois — have seen a gradual erosion in officiating numbers. Fewer people are becoming officials for the first time, and veteran referees, judges and umpires are leaving the profession more frequently.

"The numbers have been down in Illinois, just like they've been nationwide," said Sam Knox, the IHSA's assistant executive director who oversees officials. "So Illinois is not unique, but the numbers are not good to see."

The numbers back up Knox's concerns.

The IHSA had 13,694 licensed officials during the 2012-13 school year. Last school year, the IHSA only counted 12,198, a loss of 1,496 officials (10.9 percent).

Because many officials are licensed in multiple sports, some individuals hold multiple licenses. The IHSA counted 20,931 licenses for the 2012-13 school year, but only 19,072 in 2016-17. That marks a loss of 1,859 licenses (8.9 percent).

Though it's clear that officials are leaving high school athletics as more prep athletes are joining, there's less clarity among administrators as to how to stop the slump.

"We're constantly working on methods to recruit and especially retain officials, which has become more and more important," Knox said.

Knox illustrated the IHSA's retention problem by using basketball referees as an example. Of the 1,045 basketball officiating licenses that weren't renewed from 2015-16 to 2016-17, 80 percent belonged to officials who had been in the field for less than five years.

Getting officials in the door is still the first step.

One way the IHSA hopes to attract young officials is by sending each high school in the state two waivers that will cancel the $50 fee to become a licensed official in any sport. The minimum age to be an IHSA-certified official is 17.

Also on the front lines of the recruitment battle is Gary Grohovena. An IHSA official for 29 years, Grohovena also serves as the recruitment chair for the Inter-Athletic Council of Officials, an organization composed of 17 sports officials associations throughout northeastern Illinois.

One way IACO tries to attract new officials is by conducting instructional classes. The six-week football seminar, which began on July 11 in Elmwood Park, Libertyville and four other Chicago-area locations, is free to attend. Graduates walk away with their IHSA licenses in hand and only have to pay a half-priced fee of $25. They can begin officiating in August.

The organization also holds similar classes for basketball in the fall and baseball and softball in the winter. Grohovena said the number of first-time baseball and softball umpires is especially low because of

New Trier baseball coach Mike Napoleon, who used to be a basketball referee, recommended officiating to any coach as a way to help understand the sport better.

"Every coach should be an official at some point. It gives you a great perspective on how the game is played."

the start-up costs of buying equipment.

"The average age of football officials is in the mid-40s, and with softball and baseball, it's probably higher," said Grohovena, who has officiated multiple football state finals. "Those of us in the industry need to do as much as possible to get younger individuals into the pipeline."

Jim Bernardi, who will celebrate his 50th year as an official during the upcoming school year, noted the need for new officials not only to enter the profession but also sign up for games. A problem he's seen in recent years is newly licensed officials accepting few assignments, if any.

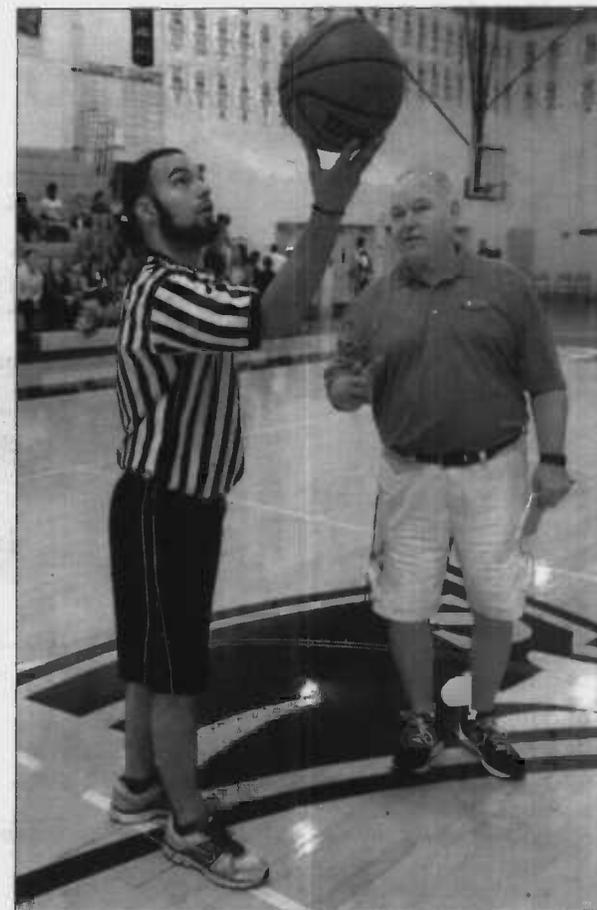

Bernardi conducts officiating clinics during Stevenson's summer basketball league. He said coaches understand that referees might not be the sharpest for freshman-level games in the summer, and sometimes he stops the action to give the new officials in-game instructions.

"The goal is to get them the confidence to go out there by themselves in the winter," said Bernardi, who also is the officials assigner for football and basketball for the North Suburban Conference. "The first time out, there will be mistakes, but it's a good way to get them going."

New Trier baseball coach Mike Napoleon has been on both ends of the officiating spectrum. In addition to baseball, he's also coached football and was a basketball referee for more than a decade earlier in his career.

He said the declining number of umpires has not affected the quality of officiating on the diamond and spoke positively of his time wearing stripes on the hardwood.

"If you've played the sport, you've got an advantage in becoming a good official," said Napoleon, whose New Trier baseball teams won state titles 2000 and 2009. "Every coach should be an official at some point. It gives you a great perspective on how the game is played."

sticking around," Clarke said. "Some of that could be lessened simply by treating officials with common courtesy."

Tony Clarke, a Zion resident, will enter his 34th year as an IHSA wrestling official next winter and has plenty of state-meet experience to his credit. He's the head clinician for IHSA wrestling and is on the NFHS wrestling rules committee. When hearing the stories of young officials who have decided to leave the ranks, two factors are most-commonly cited — pay and how officials are treated.

Of particular issue, Clarke said, is the fact that officials routinely don't receive payment from school districts for up to 90 days after completion of an assignment.

"New officials aren't battle-hardened to the criticism that can come from the crowd or coaches, and if you combine that with having to wait so long to get paid, it's hard for some to justify

That's a topic Hinsdale Central athletic director Dan Jones has tried to address in meetings with parents before each school year. He asks that any issues with officials be funneled to coaches or administrators.

Jones also said that the West Suburban Conference has recently begun mentoring programs involving the league's eight officials assigners.

"We're definitely not getting as many young officials as we used to," Jones said. "Hopefully these programs can help lead to a good experience and ensuring they have future success."
